Abstract	The increase of refugee status claiming immigrants in Canada has led to a review of the immigration policy concerning this group. This report looks at the weaknesses of current legislation which is linked to the Geneva Convention and its Protocol, studying Canada's past adherence to the rights afforded under its protection. Also discusses public and government opinion on support for a humanitarian and generous refugee policy and questions of balancing efficiency with procedural fairness to claimants. Gives a chronology of events since 1969.

Résumé	Le processus de reconnaissance du statut de réfugié au sens de la Convention de Genève, tel qu'il est énoncé dans la Loi sur l'immigration, sert à déterminer si les personnes qui revendiquent ce statut y ont effectivement droit et peuvent bénéficier de la protection accordée aux réfugiés au sens de la Convention. Ce processus s'est avéré inadéquat, tant au point de vue juridique que pratique. Dans ce bulletin, on examine les mécanismes en vigueur actuellement et le projet de réforme contenu dans la loi C-55 déposé en mai 1987.

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Canadian Research Index puts all of Canada's hard-to-find government and research literature at your fingertips. This monthly indexing, abstracting and document delivery service covers all levels of government in Canada, as well as institutions receiving research grants. Most titles included in Microlog are available in either paper or microfiche format. Combined with a microfiche collection, the Microlog Service is a powerful tool for finding Canadian report publications. The unique Microlog Accession Number is the key to immediate retrieval of any document.

SCOPE

Among other documents, Microlog includes research papers in physical, natural and social sciences, policy papers, important statistics, and annual reports. Every effort is made to ensure the currency of the index. For instance, documents appearing in the Checklist of Canadian Government Publications are delivered by Microlog approximately two months after publication of the list.

LANGUAGE POLICY

Documents issued in English or French are indexed and abstracted in the language of publication, while bilingual documents are indexed and abstracted in both languages.

SOURCES AND COVERAGE

Federal Documents: The Microlog editors review all checklists issued by the Canadian Government Publishing Centre and order every document relevant to the service. Except for serials, maps, pamphlets, and manuals, all monographs covered by the Federal Depository Plan are included in the index. Also, a special effort is made to track down elusive but important titles which do not appear in the lists.

Microlog offers a special collection of documents published by the Federal Government but not issued through the Federal Depository Plan. These titles, available to subscribers as the Non-Depository Publications collection, are indicated in the Titles section by a bullet (•). Microlog is also the direct distributing agent for many government bodies.

Provincial Documents: Depository arrangements with several provincial libraries have been established to ensure that Microlog subscribers receive all publications from those provinces. Where no depository arrangement exists, all publications lists issued by the province are reviewed for acquisitions.

Municipal Documents: Since these titles are very difficult to obtain, the Microlog editors make special efforts to include publications from municipal sources.

ACCESS

The Index provides access by subject, corporate or individual author, and series title.

The full Microlog file from 1979 to date, consisting of almost 50,000 records, is available online through Can/OLE. This is an ideal way to locate hard-to-find reports which may then be ordered directly online through the Can/DOCS service. Contact: Can/OLE Client Services, CISTI, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0S2.

FEATURES

Microlog comprises the following sections:

1. Titles and abstracts: A full bibliographic citation and a descriptive abstract for each title.
2. Name Index: Access by personal author, corporate author, and conference name.
3. Series Titles: Lists by title and number all reports in series in the service; series are available as an ongoing subscription or retrospective collection.
4. Subject Index: Descriptors based on Library of Congress and Canadiana Subject Headings are assigned to each document. A cross-referencing structure assists searchers.
5. Microfiche collections: Lists contents of each fiche collection for quick reference. These collections can be used as current awareness lists in broad subject areas to notify users of new acquisitions. This section is included in the annual cumulation as a separate fiched product.

MICROLOG AND CANADIAN STATISTICS INDEX

Statistical Material: The Canadian Statistics Index (CSI) provides further access to statistical material contained in Microlog monographs and special or annual reports. The CSI identification number has been included with the Microlog citation for the convenience of subscribers to the CSI fiche collection.

Annual Reports: Storage of annual reports in a single sequence has been a problem for clients in the past. The CSI numbers for annual reports are now listed in the bibliographic citation and appear on the microfiche header of each report, to make such sequencing possible.

DOCUMENT DELIVERY

Institutions may subscribe to complete or partial collections of the documents in Microlog. Individual copies on microfiche or paper reprint may be ordered through Micromedia's Document Delivery Service. To order, please contact:

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Index de recherche du Canada met à votre disposition toutes les publications du gouvernement et les travaux de recherche difficiles à se procurer. Combiné aux collections sur microfiches, le service Microlog constitue un outil très efficace pour retrouver les publications des différents gouvernements du Canada, ainsi que celles des organismes qui reçoivent des subventions pour la recherche. Microlog est aussi un service de livraison de documents, sur microfiches ou sous forme imprimée.

CONTENU

Microlog contient entre autres des recherches en sciences physiques, naturelles et sociales, des énoncés de politique, des statistiques et des rapports annuels. Par l'intermédiaire du service Microlog, on peut obtenir les documents qui figurent sur la Liste des publications du gouvernement du Canada environ deux mois après leur parution sur cette liste.

POLITIQUE LINGUISTIQUE

Les ouvrages publiés en français ou en anglais sont indexés et résumés dans la langue de publication; les ouvrages bilingues sont traités dans les deux langues.

SOURCES

Publications fédérales: Les rédacteurs de Microlog examinent les listes émises par le Centre d'édition du gouvernement du Canada et commandent les documents pertinents. En dehors des publications en série, cartes, brochures et manuels, toutes les monographies régies par le Programme de dépôt du gouvernement fédéral figurent dans l'index, ainsi que des ouvrages importants ne figurant pas sur les listes.

Microlog propose aussi une collection spéciale de publications fédérales non déposées, identifiées par un point (●) dans la section Titres et résumés. Microlog est aussi l'agent de diffusion de nombreux organismes gouvernementaux.

Publications provinciales: Des ententes de dépôt ont été conclues avec plusieurs bibliothèques provinciales pour que les abonnés de Microlog reçoivent toutes les publications de ces provinces. Lorsqu'aucune entente n'existe, les listes de publications émises par les provinces sont examinées afin d'acquiescer les documents.

Publications municipales: Ces ouvrages étant difficiles à se procurer, les rédacteurs de Microlog redoublent d'ardeur pour les inclure dans l'index.

ACCÈS

L'index imprimé est bilingue et les publications sont répertoriées par sujet, par auteur (collectivité et personne physique) et par titre de collection.

Le fichier complet de Microlog, de 1979 à aujourd'hui, contient près de 50,000 notices et est accessible sur

Can/OLE. Il s'agit d'un moyen idéal pour mettre la main sur des rapports difficiles à trouver qu'on peut commander par l'intermédiaire du service Can/DOCS. À ce propos, veuillez vous adresser au Service à la clientèle Can/OLE, ICIST, Ottawa (Ontario), K1A 0S2.

ORGANISATION DE L'INDEX

Microlog est divisé en cinq sections:

1. Titres et résumés: tous les titres sont catalogués et accompagnés d'un résumé descriptif.
2. Index des noms: donne un accès par auteur, collectivité-auteur et titre de conférence.
3. Titres de collections: tous les rapports publiés en série sont classés par titre et numéro. Ces collections peuvent être commandées individuellement.
4. Index des matières: les descripteurs permettent de trouver facilement les publications pertinentes; un réseau de renvois facilite la recherche.
5. Collections de microfiches: chaque collection apparaît dans une section séparée pour faciliter la recherche. Ces listes peuvent aussi servir à renseigner les usagers sur les nouveautés. Dans la refonte, cette section est insérée sous forme de microfiches.

MICROLOG ET L'INDEX DES STATISTIQUES DU CANADA

Données statistiques: L'Index des statistiques du Canada (CSI) constitue une autre source de référence sur les statistiques contenues dans certaines publications indexées dans Microlog. Celles-ci ont un numéro d'ordre spécial qui est inclus dans la référence bibliographique.

Rapports annuels: Afin de rendre le classement des rapports annuels plus facile, le numéro d'ordre CSI correspondant à ces documents figure maintenant dans les références bibliographiques et est inscrit sur les en-têtes de microfiches.

LIVRAISON DE DOCUMENTS

On peut s'abonner à l'ensemble ou à certaines des collections de documents de Microlog. On peut également commander des reproductions de documents sur microfiches ou sur papier par l'intermédiaire du service de livraison de documents de Micromedia. Pour commander, communiquer avec:

Sample CRI Search

“How can a person from a foreign country qualify for refugee status in Canada?”

The researcher can search in CRI as in any library catalogue - by subject, author and title.
Because the index is bilingual, searching can be done in English or in French.

Recherche type avec IRC

“Comment une personne d'un pays étranger peut-elle demander le statut de réfugié au Canada?”

La méthode de recherche dans IRC est la même que dans une bibliothèque, puisque les documents sont indexés par auteur, par sujet et par titre. L'index étant bilingue, la consultation peut se faire en français ou en anglais.

STEP 2/DEUXIÈME ÉTAPE

A unified search strategy

The search strategy should include all the monthly issues. Start with the most recent issue and work back. Monthly issues are cumulated annually.

Établir une stratégie de recherche unifiée

La stratégie de recherche doit tenir compte de toutes les publications mensuelles, à commencer par les plus récentes. Chaque année, ces publications font l'objet d'une refonte.

STEP 3/TROISIÈME ÉTAPE

Retrieve the publication

Each bibliographic citation gives a full description of the relevant document. Locate the document by the microfiche number in the library's collection or order from Micromedia. Individual publications are available for purchase on microfiche or paper. The bibliographic description provides publisher source information.

Repérer la publication

Chaque notice bibliographique comprend une description complète du document; celui-ci peut être repéré grâce au numéro de microfiche de la bibliothèque; sinon, il faut le commander à Micromedia. On peut se procurer les monographies sur microfiches ou sur papier. La description bibliographique comporte également des indications sur l'éditeur.

1990-91 AOSTRA/Industry Thermal Well Pumping Committee : laboratory evaluation of friction forces in sucker rod pumps

T. Sudol... et al. Calgary, AB : Alberta Research Council, Oil Sands & Hydrocarbon Recovery Dept., 1991. xiv, 294 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 96-06525 (4 fiche)

Describes experiments performed using a full-scale pump simulator to investigate the technical aspects of rod pump friction forces and pump efficiency for thermal and non-thermal well environments. Aspects examined included the relationship between various plunger/barrel clearances, viscosity of production fluids, pump efficiencies, and plunger friction forces. The experimental data, which make up the bulk of this document, provide a useful guide for designing optimal rod activated pumping systems for heavy oil production. Appendices include a theoretical study of friction forces between concentric cylinders.

A 3/4 summary of the DRAG-2 road accident model within the context of the international DRAG research network

By Marc J. Gaudry, François Fournier and Robert Simard. Montreal : Université de Montréal, Centre de recherche sur les transports, 1996. I, 41 p. : Bibl. (Publication / Université de Montréal. Centre de recherche sur les transports ; no. 96-27)
MICROLOG 96-06811 (1 fiche)

This paper reports on a family of models that explain the demand for road use, accidents and their gravity (DRAG). These models share a structure, the use of flexible form regression analysis, calibration with monthly time series data defined over a country or region, and the establishment of a reference set of results. The initial model for Quebec (called DRAG-1) is introduced, along with the development of the DRAG-2 model and the extension of the model into other countries. The paper then presents three papers from the 8th Canadian Multidisciplinary Road Safety Conference (Saskatoon, 1993): an estimation and analysis of kilometres travelled in Quebec, 1957-89; the application of the DRAG-2 model to road travel demand in Quebec; and the application of DRAG-2 to the frequency of accidents in Quebec according to different levels of severity.

The College Standards & Accreditation Council has a mandate to define credentials for, set standards for, and accredit publicly funded college programs at Ontario colleges of applied arts and technology. Accreditation is the culminating aspect of the Council's mandate: providing accountability for the quality of college programs. This paper provides a focus for consultations on establishing the Council's accreditation framework. The focus will be on providing independent assurance that colleges are themselves ensuring that graduates meet the requirements of the program standard. The paper gives an overview of the proposed accreditation process and outlines other considerations for developing an accreditation framework.

The Excavation Stability Study was conducted at the 420 level of the Underground Research Laboratory to evaluate stability and the extent of excavation damage in tunnels as a function of tunnel geometry and orientation, geology, and excavation method. The experiment used a series of ovaloid and circular openings to achieve different boundary stress levels and near-field stress distributions to assess the effect of tunnel geometry on damage development. The experiment also enabled comparison of damage in rock types with different strength characteristics, and demonstrated factors affecting tunnel stability. This document describes the experimental arrangement and instrumentation used, and summarises the preliminary observations related to tunnel stability and excavation damage. Findings of the experiment are relevant in developing design criteria and in assessing the feasibility of constructing large ovaloid openings in adverse stress conditions.

Presents results of aerial surveys of two coasts in the central Arctic, carried out in August 1994 to determine relative numbers of animals in the regions and to identify areas important to wildlife that could be negatively affected by mineral exploration and oil spills. The wildlife surveys were done at the same time as the collection of geological information on the sensitivity of the coast to oil spills, and total distance surveyed was 4,268 kilometres. Results are presented for such species as geese, ducks, gulls, musk ox, and caribou, and several areas were identified where exploration activities during late summer could have a significant negative impact on certain bird species.

Preliminary environmental studies have been completed for a proposed rehabilitation or replacement of the Lions Gate Bridge in Vancouver. As a continuation of this effort, this report evaluates air quality impacts on portions of the West End of Vancouver that could possibly be affected by vehicles making use of the new or rehabilitated crossing. Ambient levels of carbon monoxide were chosen as an indicator of vehicle activity on the West End air quality since vehicle exhausts are the only significant carbon monoxide emission source in the area. The study approach included collection of available baseline data (meteorological, traffic flow, air quality, vehicle emissions), field monitoring to refine understanding of the area's air quality, dispersion modelling of carbon monoxide levels, assessment of existing air quality, and evaluation of possible changes in air quality by 2001.

Pour ce faire, des dispositifs expérimentaux ont été installés et des inventaires de régénération avant et après coupe ont été réalisés. Le second volet proposait un suivi similaire en forêt privée sur le territoire du Bas-Saint-Laurent, dans des coupes progressives réalisées de 1988 à 1994.

Le premier décrit sommairement en quoi consiste la nouvelle méthode d'inventaire développée par l'IQAFF et de quelle façon elle se distingue des autres méthodes plus traditionnelles. Le chapitre 2 définit l'objectif de cette analyse. Suit le chapitre 3 avec la présentation du modèle d'analyse et de ses différentes composantes. Aquatic fauna of northern Alberta rivers are exposed to contaminants from municipal and industrial sources, including pulp mills. Studies of sub-lethal effects such as increased levels of enzyme activity can indicate an early response to environmental stress in these fauna. This paper reports on a project conducted to examine mixed function oxygenase activity in fish collected from six sites on the upper Athabasca River, upstream and downstream from the Hinton bleached kraft mill. The investigators applied two enzyme assays to fish liver samples collected from mountain whitefish, longnose sucker, northern pike, and white sucker. Enzyme activities were compared with contaminant residue levels and sex steroid hormones reported for the same fish in other related studies. Results presented compare levels of chlorinated dioxin and furans residues in the fish with the site-by-site pattern of enzyme activity.

Examines the employment losses and options for recovery of these losses in the forest industry in the Port Alberni region of Vancouver Island. Particular attention is paid to Tree Farm Licence 44 held by MacMillan Bloedel, which is the largest source of wood in the region. Timber and log supply analyses are presented which review the allowable annual cut (AAC) and conditions that could change it, future prospects for the AAC, log supply sources and consumption, the log supply balance, transportation factors impacting on the local forest industry, and timber and log supply options. Constraints on forest sector options for job creation are noted, including lack of industrial land and infrastructure, lack of security of supply, and rigidity of labour agreements. Concludes with forecasts of future job losses in the forest industry and with recommendations to mitigate those losses.

Application of a portable GPS/desktop mapping system for fire management support

ISBN 0-662-23712-9 CCG-P no. Fo29-42/15-1996 MICROLOG 96-06726 (1 fiche)

Describes a project conducted to demonstrate the feasibility of implementing a user-friendly, portable, low-cost global positioning system (GPS) receiver, as well as a notebook-based desktop mapping system, to facilitate rapid updating, inventory, and analysis of forest fires on a near real-time basis.

Field trials of the GPS/desktop mapping system consisted of using aerial GPS to determine fire perimeter, to locate hot spots and lightning strikes, and to identify values at risk. Ground GPS was used to survey logging roads, values at risk, and prescribed burn perimeters, to access certain locations using helicopter-borne GPS. Traditional mapping methods were then compared with the GPS/desktop mapping system. Operational testing of the GPS/desktop system was completed in 1993 by a fire crew in the Sault Ste. Marie district of Ontario.

This report begins with introductory chapters on the general characteristics of asbestos deposits, asbestos exploration and production in British Columbia; the asbestos industry; the environmental and health implications of asbestos; asbestos legislation and regulation in the United States and Canada; and a review of the physical properties and mineralogy of the different types of asbestos. The remainder of the report consists of a systematic review of the asbestos resources of British Columbia. A detailed geological summary accompanies each showing description. The regional geology of each area has been used to characterise the 97 known occurrences of asbestos, with particular attention to the relationship to host rocks, adjacent lithologies, tectonic setting, and proximity of intrusion. A status is applied to each occurrence (showing, prospect, developed prospect, or past producer). Deposit descriptions are arranged by both host terrane and physiographic area. Asbestos mineralisation is identified, where possible, by mineral type (asbestiform serpentine or amphibole).

Assessment and validation of modelling under-ice dissolved oxygen using DOSTOC, Athabasca River, 1988 to 1994

MICROLOG 96-06612 (3 fiche)

The aim of this study was to examine the existing model approach and to make recommendations for improved modelling of under-ice dissolved oxygen (DO) concentrations in the Athabasca River. Previous modelling efforts have involved using the DO simulation model DOSTOC, but discrepancies between observed and predicted DO concentrations for 1992 and 1993 highlighted the needs for a review and assessment of the modelling approaches used. This report reviews the structure of the DOSTOC model and input data used for modelling, then describes a stochastic run of the model using the best available values for input data and process rates, including revised rates and ratios for converting five-day biological oxygen demand (BOD) values to ultimate BOD values, measured values for sediment oxygen demand and sedimentation, and a temperature correction for pulp mill BOD decay rates. Simulation results indicate whether the model could predict DO for 1990-94 winters. Regression equations were also developed relating DO concentration to river distance.

This report describes results of an investigation into the likely impacts of Peace River flow regulation on the natural progradation of the Slave River Delta into Great Slave Lake. The investigators used a combination of aerial photography from 1946, 1966, 1977, and 1994 in addition to ground truthing to interpret changes in plant assemblage patterns and delta channel geomorphol-

Residents at Mayfair Court, a residential area bordering an industrial complex in Kelowna, have complained about noise and odour emissions from the adjacent industries. One of the major constituents of the objectionable odour was identified as styrene. In 1995, an air quality assessment was requested to determine whether the emissions from the adjacent industries presented a health hazard. This report presents results of an air quality assessment that measured the ambient air concentrations of styrene, benzene, toluene, ethyl benzene, xylene, and particulate matter under 10 microns in diameter. The sampling period had a good cross-section of meteorological conditions. Results presented include 24-hour average ambient concentrations, instances and extent of exceedances of recommended guidelines for air contaminants, and assessment of additive effects.

A previous study (fiche 96-06644) assessed the long-term risk from inadvertent human intrusion into an underground nuclear fuel waste disposal facility. The study analysed four intrusion scenarios, all initiated by a drilling operation. Risk estimates used a risk conversion factor recommended by the Atomic Energy Control Board, based on recommendations of Publication 26 of the International Commission on Radiological Protection. This report reassesses the risks from the human intrusion scenarios using recommendations made in later Commission publications. It uses risk factors recommended in Publication 60 to estimate the risks of cancer detriment and serious hereditary effects, and also includes, where applicable, estimates of fatalities resulting from deterministic radiation effects (as recommended in Publication 64). The results are compared to the results using the Board's risk criterion.

Assessment of trophic position and food sources using stable isotopes of sulfur, carbon and nitrogen, Peace and Athabasca rivers, 1992 and 1993

MICROLOG 96-06610 (1 fiche)

Describes a study of the stable isotope composition of sulphur, carbon, and nitrogen in the tissues of fish from two locations in the Athabasca River and two on the Peace River. Fish species analysed included burbot, walleye, mountain whitefish, northern pike, goldeye, longnose sucker, and lake chub.

A set of samples consisting of biofilm, invertebrates, and fish from the upper Athabasca was also analysed. The purpose of the study was to extend the data base on feeding and movement of fish which could be derived from the carbon and sulphur isotope data, and to use the nitrogen isotope data to define the trophic positions of the organisms. Isotope analyses of water samples established the isotope signals of the source of organic matter produced in or carried into the Athabasca by its tributaries so that the dependence of the food chain on those sources could be assessed.

The Bank of Canada's new Quarterly Projection Model (QPM) combines the short-term dynamic properties necessary to support regular economic projections with the consistent behavioural structure necessary for policy analysis. This volume reviews the history of macro modelling at the Bank and how that history has conditioned the nature of QPM and the methodology used in its construction. It then describes the model, focusing on the types of shocks it was designed to handle and the key elements of its dynamic structure. Two important features are noted: forward-looking expectations and endogenous policy rules. Also discussed is the methodology used to calibrate the model to reflect Canadian data, including examples of how the calibration was performed for QPM. Finally, the volume illustrates the properties of QPM in dynamic simulation by describing the results of numerous shocks to the model.

Between 1987 and 1992, Paul Bernardo/Teale raped or sexually assaulted at least 18 women in Scarborough, Peel, and St. Catharines, and killed three women in St. Catharines and Burlington. This report presents findings of a review of the work performed by local and provincial law enforcement and forensic agencies during the Bernardo investigations, examining the special problems that an interjurisdictional serial rapist and killer like Bernardo can pose for investigation and enforcement. Sections of the review consider the Metro Toronto Police investigation, the tests performed at the Centre of Forensic Sciences, the secret killing of Tammy Homolka, the Henley Island attack and various stalking incidents, the Green Ribbon Task Force investigations, the identification/arrest/questioning of Bernardo, the search of his house, the Jane Doe video clip, sexual assault victim concerns, and the Criminal Intelligence Service of Ontario. The final section notes the need for a strategic defence against serial predators, reviews relevant lessons from other jurisdictions, identifies systemic problems in the Bernardo case, and makes recommendations for co-ordinated case management and other measures that would help prevent similar cases.

A best management practice as described in this series of booklets is a practical, affordable approach to conserving or enhancing a farm's soil and water without sacrificing productivity. This booklet describes a range of integrated pest management (IPM) options using best management practices. IPM has four main steps: identifying the pest or pests, monitoring pest and beneficial species, determining pest thresholds, and choosing control options and assessing their effectiveness. The overall objective is to keep the pest species below the population density that causes economic loss. Management practices covered in the booklet include pest trapping, proper timing of pest control measures, choosing proper sites for growing crops, selection of pest-resistant cultivars, crop rotation, proper sanitation practices, biological control, and manipulation of planting and harvesting dates.

ISBN 0226-7497) ISBN 0-7726-2640-5
MICROLOG 96-07066 (2 fiche)

This report compiles coal quality data from most of the coal fields in British Columbia. Data are from two major sources: analyses of raw coal samples collected at producing mines; and coal assessment reports submitted by industry. Specific analytical parameters discussed include coal petrography, proximate and ultimate analyses, calorific value, mineral matter content, ash chemistry, phosphorus concentrations, trace element concentrations, and caking power. The focus is on raw coals throughout, although in certain cases clean coal data are used. The report also compares British Columbia coals with world coals and comments on factors influencing suitability of the province's coals for various end uses.

This study is based on 264 data triplets consisting of suspended sediment concentration, duration of exposure, and severity of ill effect for fishes, with data taken from a comprehensive literature review. Supporting data extracted from the review include taxonomic group and species of fish, natural history, life history phase, and sediment particle size range. The study presents a meta-analytic synthesis of dose-response data, yielding six empirical equations that relate biological response of fish to duration of exposure and suspended sediment concentration. The six equations address various taxonomic groups of lotic, lentic, and estuarine fishes, life stages of species within those groups, and particle sizes of suspended sediments. The severity of ill effect expressed by the equations is delineated semi-quantitatively along a 15-point scale ranging from no effect to lethal consequences. The study also provides best available estimates of the onset of sub-lethal and lethal effects.

Information is then presented on consumptive uses of water, including licensed water use, drinking water, agriculture, and industrial use; and on non-consumptive uses of water including fishing, recreation, transportation, and ecological (instream) uses. Finally, stakeholder issues and concerns are discussed: the importance of water quality, the factors affecting water quality and quantity, major threats to water quality and quantity, and measures of ecosystem health. Concludes with a summary of views on the kind of management structure that could be established for ongoing protection of the river basins.

This study was carried out with 108 subjects aged 3 to 6 to determine when children begin to understand that ambiguous visual clues are an insufficient source of knowledge. Two different-coloured (unambiguous) and two same-coloured (ambiguous) stuffed animals were introduced to the subject and another. The animals from one pair were then secretly placed in two separate boxes which had a small hole in the centre enabling a viewer to see each animal's colour but not its shape. The investigators tested to see whether children at different ages could realise that the other child of the pair could identify the unambiguous pair but not the ambiguous pair. The study presents an argument regarding the development of an understanding of ambiguity and the reason for such development.

The main objective of this study is to assess how Chile's trade, investment, legal, and economic regimes comply with, or would have to be modified, in order to meet the disciplines of the North American Free Trade Agreement. The first part analyses the legal and institutional matters which are included in the successive chapters of the Agreement. Provisions discussed relate to trade rules and procedures, emergency action, standard-related measures, government procurement, investment, cross-border trade in services, competition and state enterprises, temporary entry, intellectual property, dispute settlement and institutional provisions, environmental standards, and labour. The second part contains an analysis of business opportunities in Chile for Canadian companies in the following sectors: agri-food, telecommunications, financial services, energy, mining, and forestry.

The Columbia Valley aquifer is located 16 kilometres south of Chilliwack, south-western British Columbia. This unconfined aquifer is a source of drinking water that is susceptible to contamination from local land use practices. To address concerns of Valley residents, a water quality study was initiated and the results for nitrate and nitrite are presented in this report. Nitrate-nitrogen was analysed in water samples obtained in November 1994 and April 1995 from 26 wells. All nitrate and nitrite concentrations are expressed in the report as nitrogen. Sites with nitrate concentrations above background levels are noted and possible sources of the contamination are discussed.

This study consists of two parts: a review of existing national and international research on the impact of prison development within communities, and a public opinion survey concerning the effects of provincial prisons in three British Columbia communities. The study surveys the effects of prisons on communities based on the following broad categories: public safety; economic impacts; the perceived effects of offender presence; and the general effects on community aesthetics (environment and quality of life). The literature review analysed 25 studies, over half of which were completed in the decade prior to this study. The review uncovered a broad set of materials with consistent findings. The opinion survey asked residents within a two-kilometre radius of prisons in Nanaimo, Surrey, and Victoria a variety of questions regarding public safety, fear of crime, economic impacts, and general effects of the prison on the community. The appendix includes a copy of the survey ques-

Computing a shortest external line segment from which a polygon is weakly externally visible

A simple polygon is said to be weakly externally visible from a line segment if it lies outside the polygon and if for every point P on the boundary of the polygon there is a point Q on the line segment such that no point in the interior of the line segment PQ lies inside the polygon. This paper proposes a linear time algorithm for computing a shortest line segment from which the polygon is weakly externally visible. This is done by a suitable generalisation of a linear time algorithm which solves the same problem for a convex polygon.

Metallothioneins are a family of proteins whose synthesis in animal organs and tissues can be induced by exposure to heavy metals. This report describes metallothionein concentrations in fish collected from northern Alberta rivers and tributaries. The analyses incorporate results from examination of kidney, liver, intestine, and gill tissues of burbot, longnose sucker, northern pike, and flathead chub. Results are organised into reference (upstream locations and tributaries receiving no inputs from pulp mills), near-field (within 100 kilometres downstream from a pulp mill), and far-field (over 100 kilometres downstream).

Mediation is gaining popularity as an alternative method of resolving disputes. This report focuses on a major issue related to mediation: the extent to which mediation confidentiality can be maintained against subsequent attempts to use mediation information as evidence in litigation. With few exceptions, there does not currently exist in Manitoba or Canada any statutory or common-law privilege which could protect mediation confidentiality in general. This report reviews the current legislation and common law related to the above issue, including a description of the situation in the United States. It then outlines a framework for reform of Manitoba law, exploring all the variables for and against the possible approaches dealing with the issue of mediation confidentiality. Finally, the report discusses and explains a number of proposed reform solutions, and provides a list of recommendations. The appendix contains a draft of a proposed Manitoba Evidence Amendment Act and an outline of the types of limited privilege provisions currently found in Manitoba statutes.

Deux méthodes indépendantes ont été utilisées pour calculer un bilan de masse des BPC pour le système de l'Estuaire et du Golfe, et trois différents scénarios de déversement possible des BPC provenant de l'Irving Whale ont été examinés, soit : 1) un écoulement faible, intermittent ou continu, des BPC contenus dans la barge; 2) un déversement important de BPC provenant de la barge près du fond; et 3) un déversement important de BPC provenant de la barge dans les eaux de surface.

Crevice corrosion is the most likely source of corrosion damage to containers proposed to be used for the burial of nuclear fuel waste in the Canadian Shield. This report describes experiments investigating the effect of chloride concentration on crevice corrosion of two materials selected as candidates for constructing the containers: Ti-2, a commercially pure titanium with iron as an impurity, and Ti-12, a titanium alloyed with small amounts of nickel and molybdenum to provide enhanced resistance to crevice corrosion. Investigators studied and compared the crevice corrosion of the two materials at a temperature of 150 degrees C in solutions ranging in sodium chloride concentration from 0.27 to 5 moles per litre. A technique using an artificially creviced electrode coupled through an ammeter was employed to follow the potential of the crevice specimen and the coupled current due to oxygen reduction on the coupled electrode. Total amounts of crevice corrosion were estimated from weight change measurements.

The sort answer is yes, provided one accepts three fundamental precepts: crises are inevitable; like any other management challenge, crises should be planned for, at least in the sense that certain management procedures can be agreed upon in advance and implemented once a crisis hits; and, crisis management is an integral part of every manager's responsibility. This primer is based on these precepts. Understanding the transport characteristics of fine sediments is essential for modelling the transport, bioaccumulation, and fate of contaminants in river systems. In northern Alberta rivers, it has been demonstrated that pulp mill effluent affects the physical transport characteristics of river sediment. Accurate modelling of suspended sediment transport must take into account the flocculation of suspended sediment by such effluent. In this study, sediments from the Athabasca River near Hinton (where there is a pulp mill) were tested in a laboratory flume and their transport parameters measured, with and without the presence of pulp mill effluent. The study provides quantitative information on critical conditions for erosion and deposition of sediment flocs, essential for modelling the contaminant transport. The influence of the effluent on the transport behaviour is also quantified.

The areas described in this report comprise groups of mining properties and gold production areas, one located just east of Pickle Lake, 150 miles north-east of Sioux Lookout, Ontario, and the other located at Uchi Lake, 75 miles north-northwest of Sioux Lookout. The report describes the areas' development history, transportation access, general geology (Precambrian volcanics, sediments, intrusives), structural geology (folding, shearing and fracturing, vein structures, faulting), and economic geology (types of gold deposits, mineralisation, wall rock alteration, age and origin of the gold deposits). Descriptions are provided of the areas' gold mines, including mine geology, mineralisation, ore relationships and mineralogy, structural control, and production; and of other gold mining properties and claims.

This report provides an overall synthesis of Northern River Basins Study research on how developments within the Peace, Athabasca, and Slave river basins have had cumulative impacts on the mainstem and main tributary aquatic ecosystems in the study area. Specifically, the report reviews the key scientific findings in the context of the Study's guiding questions and eight research components: water quality, contaminant distribution, fate and effects, benthos, fish and fish habitat, riparian vegetation and wildlife, hydrology and hydraulics, drinking water quality, nutrients, dissolved oxygen, traditional knowledge, and use of aquatic resources. It also provides an integrated interpretation of the key findings in the context of cumulative effects and contains recommendations related to future aquatic ecosystem management.

As part of a study on alternative silvicultural systems for British Columbia, this report describes a field study investigating the damage to residual trees from cable yarding. At both sites, two types of skyline corridors were used to test whether the shape of the corridors affected yarding productivity or damage to individual trees. Results are presented for a comparative statistical analysis applied to the residual tree damage data.

The Dawson Creek Timber Supply Area (TSA) covers about 2.3 million hectares in the Prince George Forest Region of British Columbia. This report first presents a profile of the TSA, including community and environmental setting, demographics, employment, forest industry activity, other local industries such as tourism, agriculture, and mining, and First Nations. It then describes current forestry operations in the TSA, including the harvesting land base and annual allowable cut, coniferous and deciduous operations, industry structure, and economic impacts; and reviews the social and environmental, community, and First Nations impacts in the TSA and the province resulting from changes in timber harvest levels. The appendix includes a description of the economic impact analysis methodology used and a glossary.

About 36% of the TSA land base is considered suitable for commercial timber harvesting. This discussion paper summarises technical reports from the Timber Supply Review in the Dawson Creek TSA with the intent to encourage comment from the public. It outlines the background to the Review, describes the resources of the TSA and its current allowable annual cut, provides a socio-economic profile of the TSA, reviews forest management practices and timber supply forecasts for the TSA (including factors that could affect those forecasts), and concludes with a discussion of the environmental and socio-economic implications of changes in timber supply. BC FO PR SC

Rio Algom Ltd. and Denison Mines Ltd. are seeking licences to decommission four uranium tailings waste management areas associated with uranium mines in the Elliot Lake area that operated in the last 40 years but are now closed. This report begins with a review of the local setting of the decommissioning project proposals: the local environment, the tailings sites, and the Elliot Lake community. It then outlines the primary issues associated with decommissioning (acid rock drainage, radiological exposure, security of waste storage facilities); the basic options for disposal, containment, and long-term monitoring; and the status of other idle uranium tailings sites in the area. The specific proposals for decommissioning each site are described and analysed with regard to phases of decommissioning, technical matters such as structural stability and effluent treatment, and socio-economic considerations. Finally, operation and management of the waste storage facilities over the long term are discussed, including monitoring, maintenance, research, financial assurance, and funding management.

The Disposal of Canada's nuclear fuel waste : a study of postclosure safety of in-room emplacement of used Candu fuel in copper containers in permeable plutonic rock, vol. 2 : vault model

A study has been undertaken to evaluate the design and long-term performance of a nuclear fuel waste disposal vault based on a concept of in-room emplacement of copper containers at a depth of 500 metres in plutonic rock. Container manufacturing defects are assumed to be the only potential source of radionuclide release in the vault. This document describes the vault system used in the concept and the computer model that simulates the release of radionuclides that would occur upon contact of the used fuel with groundwater, the diffusive transport of these radionuclides through the defect and buffer material, and their dispersive and convective transport into the surrounding rock. The vault model uses a computationally efficient boundary integral model that simulates radionuclide mass transport; a three dimensional finite element model is used to verify the accuracy of the boundary integral model. To account for both uncertainty and variability, the vault model uses distributed or probabilistic parameter values. In describing the model, the document places particular emphasis on the mechanistic understanding of the processes leading to radionuclide release, explaining the basis of selection of parameter values, and justifying the exclusion of certain processes from the model.

By F.W. Stanchell...et al. Pinawa, MB : Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., Whiteshell Laboratories, 1996. vi, 54 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl. (AECL research / Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. ; AECL-11494-3 ISSN 0067-0367) ISBN 0-660-16502-3 CCG-P no. CC2-11494/3E MICROLOG 96-06955 (1 fiche)

This report discusses an approach used to develop a model of the three-dimensional network of transport pathways through the geosphere from the location of a nuclear fuel waste disposal vault at a depth of 500 metres in a hypothetical permeable plutonic rock mass. The transport pathways correspond to the pathways of advective groundwater movement through this permeable rock from the disposal vault to discharge areas at the ground surface. The hydrogeological environment assumed for this geosphere model assigns properties to the various rock domains that result in relatively rapid groundwater flow from the depth of the disposal vault to surface discharge areas. The geosphere model accounts for the effects of natural geothermal heat and vault-induced heat on transport pathways and also incorporates the effects of a groundwater supply well drawing water from a fracture zone in the rock mass. The report describes the modelling and sensitivity analyses performed with the MOTIF finite element model to develop the GEONET transport network for this hypothetical geosphere situation.

The Canadian concept for underground disposal of nuclear fuel waste has been fully documented in an environmental impact assessment, which includes the results of a postclosure assessment case study to address the long-term safety of the disposal concept. The case study included modelling of biosphere interactions using the BIOTRAC (BIosphere Transport and Assessment Code) model. This paper documents the changes made to a revised BIOTRAC model used in another postclosure assessment study, which involves different assumptions and engineering options compared to the original case study. It describes changes to the model and to parameter values for the following BIOTRAC submodels: geosphere/biosphere interface, surface water, soil, atmosphere, human food-chain and dose, and non-human food chain and dose. Finally, the paper evaluates the impact of changes in the model on the BIOTRAC model predictions.

The feasibility of the Canadian concept of underground disposal of nuclear fuel waste, as well as its impact on environmental and human health, have been presented in an environmental impact statement (EIS). An EIS case study examined a hypothetical implementation of the concept which made certain assumptions such as the use of Grade-2 titanium containers for the waste and the location of the disposal vault in a domain of low-permeability, sparsely fractured plutonic rock. This report evaluates the long-term safety of a second hypothetical implementation that has several noticeable differences, including the use of copper containers and vault location in a more permeable rock domain. The report considers the groundwater transport scenario and the radionuclides expected to be the most important contributors to dose and radiological risk. Modelling is performed using the SYVAC3 code and models representing the vault, geosphere, and biosphere. The study illustrates the flexibility for designing engineered barriers to accommodate a permeable host-rock condition in which advection is the dominant contaminant transport process.

The concept for disposal of Canada's nuclear fuel waste involves isolating the waste in corrosion-resistant containers emplaced in a sealed vault in the Canadian Shield. A reference study of the long-term performance and behaviour of a hypothetical implementation of this concept assumes the containers are constructed from Grade-2 titanium. This report investigates the effects of a different choice, which assumes the use of long-lived containers constructed high-purity copper. The report explores the effects of such containers for a vault emplaced in permeable plutonic rock, where the geological characteristics of the geosphere are assumed to result in short groundwater travel times from the disposal vault to the surface. The analyses of radionuclide movement in the groundwater flow system use the MOTIF finite element model. The biosphere model used is an updated version of the BIOTRAC model used in the reference study.

Adverse effects of low environmental oxygen on fish reproduction represents a distinct possibility in the Athabasca and Peace drainages. Species spawning in late fall and winter, such as burbot, would be the most likely to be impacted by low dissolved oxygen (DO). This report describes a study whose objective was to define the temporal changes in reproductive hormones, identify changes in blood electrolytes, haemoglobin, haematocrit, and blood oxygen content, and evaluate the viability of eggs and sperm for burbot during the period of sexual development under normal and hypoxic conditions. The results evaluate the potential of realistic winter water temperatures and hypoxic conditions to impair reproductive performance and induce stress in spawning burbot in the Northern River Basins Study area.

Des données de température et de salinité recueillies aux été 1994 et 1995 à la tête du chenal Laurentien, ainsi que des images satellite, ont permis de caractériser les masses d'eau à cet endroit. Les trois masses d'eau typique de ce système, les nappes superficielle, intermédiaire et profonde, avaient des caractéristiques indiquant : 1) un amincissement et une élévation de la nappe intermédiaire froide à la fin de l'été, associés à l'épaississement de la nappe profonde, 2) une nappe intermédiaire plus froide en 1995 et 3) une structure spatiale récurrente caractérisée par la convergence de la nappe intermédiaire froide à la tête du chenal a été observée la plupart du temps, de même que les fronts associés aux contacts de celle-ci avec les masses d'eau adjacentes de la décharge du Saguenay et de l'estuaire supérieur. Les résultats suggèrent que l'intensité et l'occurrence de ces phénomènes sont liés au cycle vie-eau/morte-eau et au vent qui génère régulièrement des remontées d'eau profonde le long de la côte nord.

Avant l'adoption de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, les provinces déterminaient seules la langue d'enseignement dans les écoles publiques. La proclamation de la Charte, le 17 avril 1982, a conféré une nouvelle dimension au système canadien d'éducation : le droit, inscrit dans la Constitution, à l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité. Cette étude se veut un outil de référence sur la situation des droits scolaires linguistiques au Canada. Il semblait utile de regrouper dans un même document l'ensemble des dispositions législatives des provinces et territoires liées à l'accès à l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité et à la gestion scolaire. Une attention particulière a été portée sur les références aux dispositions pertinentes, de façon à faciliter un accès aux sources primaires.

The goal of this paper is to measure trend unemployment as opposed to the natural rate of unemployment or the non-accelerating-inflation rate of unemployment. The paper first outlines the macro framework in which trend unemployment is defined, and discusses econometric issues relating to estimation and inference when the unemployment rate and its structural determinants are nonstationary. The paper then examines whether the unemployment rate is cointegrated with the various structural factors, including the degree of unionisation of the labour force and payroll taxes. This is performed within a single-equation framework using an unemployment equation. An extensive sensitivity analysis is conducted in order to examine the robustness of the results.

This study examines the cost of processing logs into lumber in Interior British Columbia, based on confidential data collected by the provincial forest service in an annual survey of lumber manufacturers. The study identifies factors that are important in determining lumber manufacturing costs and develops a theoretical manufacturing cost model. Empirical results are presented for the estimated cost functions and are used to show how sensitive manufacturing costs are to changes in the independent variables and also to determine the derived demand for labour. The final section discusses how the results may be used in the valuation of standing timber. An appendix examines in more detail the manufacturing cost data by manufacturing phase.

Fallow deer (Dama dama) farming has spread widely throughout several countries including Canada. Fallow deer have gained popularity due to their low aggressiveness, ease of handling, low labour and feed requirements, and ability to be raised on a few acres of land. This report begins with an introduction on game farm legislation and an overview of the fallow deer industry and venison market in Canada. It then presents guidelines for fallow deer production in Saskatchewan, including pasture management, deer handling and breeding, and a deer farming calendar; financial information for fallow deer producers, including capital asset requirements, operating requirements, and income. A projected income statement for a hypothetical fallow deer operation is included.

The concept for disposal of Canada's nuclear fuel waste involves isolating the waste in corrosion-resistant containers emplaced in a sealed vault in the Canadian Shield. A reference study of the long-term performance and behaviour of a hypothetical implementation of this concept assumes the containers are constructed from Grade-2 titanium. This report investigates the effects of a different choice, which assumes the use of long-lived containers constructed from such materials as high-purity copper or Grade-12 or -16 titanium alloys. These materials would provide much longer periods of protection. The report explores the effects of long-lived containers for the same vault layout and orientation that were assumed for the reference study, as well as the effects for two less favourable situations in which the vault is closer to, or on both sides of, a fracture zone. The analyses use the SYVAC3-CC3 probabilistic assessment code, with input data adjusted to approximate the expected protection characteristics of alternative container materials.

Forest managers commonly use herbicides to release young conifers from associated non-crop vegetation. Concern has been raised over the potential effects on wildlife of conifer release with herbicides. The most commonly used herbicide in Canadian forestry is Vision, whose active ingredient is glyphosate. Although glyphosate is considered practically non-toxic to mammals, indirect effects (reduced forage) concern both biologists and hunters. This report examines the effects of Vision on moose browse quantity and moose area use near Thunder Bay, Ontario, to study the effects of conifer release with Vision on nutritional browse quality four and eight years after treatment. Both winter (twigs) and summer (leaves) forages were analysed from four plant species commonly eaten by moose in early successional forests: hazel, aspen, raspberry, and willow. Results are presented only for the more important nutrient, digestible protein.

It presents a new data structure for storing the tree associated with a basis and introduces a new method in which the pivot choice is based on this data structure. Adaptive pivot choice is then tested on a variety of problems to demonstrate the efficiency of the proposed method on problems of varying difficulty.

This report describes three nuclear fuel waste disposal vaults using the in-room emplacement method. It first provides a generic disposal vault design suitable for a 500-1,000 metre depth range in highly stressed, fractured rock. The design process is described for all components of the vault system. The generic design is then applied to two different disposal vaults, one at 750 metre depth in a low hydraulically conductive, sparsely fractured rock mass and the other at 500 metre depth in a higher conductivity, moderately fractured rock mass. Discussion of the disposal facility design begins with a detailed description of a copper-shell, packed-particle disposal container and the factors that influenced its design. The disposal-room generic design details include specifications, numerical analyses, backfilling and sealing material, and operational processes. Other aspects presented include the vault layout and factors that influenced its design, the packaging plant for filling the disposal containers, surface facilities, and implementation of the disposal facility (siting, construction, operation, decommissioning, closure).

Le ministère de la Justice a confié à la Société de services juridiques de la Colombie-Britannique la réalisation de cette enquête nationale qui s'est déroulée entre août 1994 et mars 1995. L'enquête visait à répertorier les ressources d'information juridique ainsi qu'à décrire et à évaluer les programmes et les services ayant pour objet d'aider les jeunes à comprendre les droits et responsabilités que leur confère la loi. Ce projet avait pour but de mener une enquête nationale en vue de déterminer comment les jeunes Canadiens sont informés des droits et responsabilités que leur confère la loi, de quels ministères provinciaux relève l'information juridique et comment on s'acquitte de ce mandat dans chaque province ou territoire.

Presents the analytical results and spatial trends for the following contaminants in bottom sediment samples collected from northern Alberta rivers in 1994-95: polychlorinated dibenzo-p-dioxins, dibenzofurans, resin acids, polyaromatic hydrocarbons, chlorinated phenolics, polychlorinated biphenyls, extractable organic halides, toxaphene, and mercury. Sampling locations were chosen to provide broad coverage of both the Athabasca and Peace river basins, coverage of key mixing zones downstream from four pulp mills, and replication with locations sampled previously. The 1994-95 survey objectives included: determination of within-site variability in bottom sediment contamination; testing of the assumption that the sand fraction is not an important repository of contaminants; and providing a data set for comparison with earlier bottom sediment collections in 1988-89 and 1992.

Summarises and interprets the analytical results for various organic chlorine contaminants in fish collected from northern Alberta river systems and also compares the observed organochlorine levels with the regulatory limits set by Health Canada. Major organochlorine groups detected were polychlorinated biphenyls, DDT- and chlordane-related compounds, toxaphene, and chlorinated phenolics. Background information is included on the properties, uses, toxicity, sources, environmental fate and transport, and bioaccumulation of the contaminants studied. Results are given for such fish species as mountain whitefish, burbot, northern pike, and longnose sucker, and for concentrations observed at locations downstream and upstream of known sources of contaminants.

As a consequence of the stable economy and economic growth in Chile over the past 15 years, environmental problems have increased and environmental issues are becoming more important to the Chilean public, government, and business. This report reviews how Chile is responding to environmental issues, describes the main problems regarding the environment in that country, how they are viewed, what is being done about them, and what different sectors have proposed to be done in the future. It first reviews general aspects such as environmental legislation, institutions with environmental competence in Chile, and the government basis for intervention in environmental matters. It then presents reviews of environmental problems and issues in the following sectors: mining, forestry, agriculture, urban areas, and marine environment. The appendix contains sectoral directories of Chilean universities, organisations, companies, and government agencies involved in environmental affairs.

The intent of this document is to review literature relating to the barriers and problems experienced by ethnocultural minority women who are victims of spousal assault. Those barriers and problems are those which may limit access to, or use of, the justice system or justice-related services. Types of barriers considered include language barriers; barriers related to availability, appropriateness, and access to legal information or justice-related services; barriers related to cultural belief and practice; barriers related to immigration policies and experiences; racism; socio-economic barriers; and barriers associated with the criminal justice system itself. The document also examines the response of ethnocultural minority women to the mandatory charge policy, one of the most critical components of a criminal justice response to spousal assault.

Ce projet avait pour objectif d'optimiser les méthodes d'éducation de jeunes peuplements de sapin baumier pour produire du bois de sciage de qualité dans les sapinières de la Haute Côte-Nord. Cette étude était importante car depuis 1982, plus de 10 000 ha de ce traitement ont été réalisés dans l'unité de gestion de Les Escoumins. En plus d'établir une table de production pour les peuplements éclaircis, le promoteur se proposait de développer des outils de connaissance sur la croissance, la qualité et la production de bois des sapinières éclaircies et d'améliorer le cas échéant, la norme pour les éclaircies précommerciales. La recherche s'est déroulée selon les 3 étapes suivantes : l'inventaire sur le terrain, l'analyse des tiges et la compilation des données; l'analyse statistique et l'interprétation des résultats, et finalement; l'analyse financière et la rédaction du rapport.

Some papers closely follow the talk given, while others have been extensively rewritten, in some cases in response to questions raised in the meeting itself. Topics covered in the papers include risk factors for domestic assault, clinical signs for assessing ongoing risk for violence in individual batterers, the role of treatment programs in cultural change, factors other than treatment programs that can cause positive change in batterers, and the history of treatment of male batterers. The appendix contains a literature review of quantitative research on men who batter.

Excess volatility and speculative bubbles in the Canadian dollar : real or imagined?

By John Murray, Simon Van Norden and Robert Vigfusson. Ottawa : Bank of Canada, 1996. vii, 43 p. : ill., Bibl. (Technical report / Bank of Canada ; no. 76) ISSN 0713-7931 ISBN 0-662-24909-7 MICROLOG 96-06577 (1 fiche)

Greater intervention by the public sector is often proposed as a solution to the increased speculation and excessive price volatility thought to characterise today's competitive world financial system. This paper attempts to determine whether financial asset prices are in fact subject to excess volatility, using the Canadian dollar as a representative asset. The first section describes the behaviour of the Canadian dollar over 25 years beginning in June 1970, when Canada decided to return to a flexible rate system. Broad movements in the dollar as well as daily changes are examined and compared with those of other major currencies and financial assets. This is followed by a series of tests designed to check for persistent misalignments in the currency. A reduced-form model of real exchange rate determination is estimated using cointegration techniques, and the analysis is extended with a test for speculative bubbles based on a regime-switching specification in which the market is dominated at different times by speculative traders and other agents guided by more fundamental factors. The paper concludes with a discussion of the policy implications of the results obtained.

Expressing time intervals and repetition within a formalization of calendars

By Diana Cukderman and James P. Deigrande. Burnaby, BC : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science, 1996. 45 p. : ill., Bibl. (Technical report / Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science ; CSS/IS TR96-04) MICROLOG 96-06924 (1 fiche) (Available on fiche only)

This paper investigates a formal representation of time units, calendars, and time unit instances as restricted temporal entities for reasoning about repeated activities. The authors examine characteristics of time units and provide a categorisation of the hierarchical relations among them, and define and abstract hierarchical unit structure (a calendar structure) that expresses specific relations and properties among the units that compose it. Specific objects in the time line are represented based on this formalism, including non-convex intervals corresponding to repeated activities. A goal of this research is to be able to represent and reason efficiently about repeated activities, which would provide a valuable framework for scheduling systems, financial systems, process control systems, and date-based systems in general.

Presents proceedings of a symposium that brought together a number of the key players in various areas of work and family policies. Symposium participants explored issues of work and family through discussion and interaction with participants from other sectors such as unions, employers, government, community, and economic and social planning. Issues considered at the symposium include the work environment, how work affects family life, the impact of the lack of inter-sectoral collaboration on social issues, social systems which affect the work and lives of families, the national and global economic context in which work and family policies are developed, the impact of economic decisions, the case of domestic workers, and priorities for collaboration between sectors.

Ce document porte sur le symposium La famille et l'économie : l'équation des années 90. Cet événement est très pertinent pour plusieurs raisons. Premièrement, il coïncide avec l'Année Internationale de la famille, proclamée par les Nations Unies, au cours de laquelle on porte une attention particulière à tous les aspects de la famille. Deuxièmement, il souligne que la prospérité économique et le bien-être des familles sont inextricablement liés. Et, troisièmement, il s'inscrit dans le contexte de la crise des soins, c'est-à-dire la pression croissante exercée sur les travailleuses et travailleurs en vue d'augmenter la productivité et de répondre aux besoins de personnes à charge. Cette trousse d'information a été préparée dans le but de présenter une grande variété de perspectives sur quelques-unes des principales questions. Certains ouvrages ou articles vous forceront peut-être à modifier vos opinions au sujet du travail et de la famille.

MICROLOG 96-06584 (1 fiche)

Describes a field testing program used to evaluate the effectiveness of winter sand in improving the friction of snowpacked and icy road surfaces under a variety of conditions. The investigators measured the friction coefficient using an electronic recording decelerometer during locked-wheel skids and using a towed trailer which measured friction coefficient at a constant wheel-slip ratio of 12%. Stopping distance was estimated from the friction coefficients. Snow properties, pavement temperature, and atmospheric conditions were also measured, and the effects of test parameters on the immediate, sanded friction coefficient and on friction coefficient after passage of several vehicles were compared. Test parameters included sand type, sand size gradation, sand application rate, and pre-wetting of the sand with de-icer solution.

Over 750,000 tons of pyritic waste rock and reject sulphide ore have been stockpiled at Heath Steele Mines in New Brunswick. This waste is a significant source of acid rock drainage (ARD), caused by oxidation of sulphide minerals and contact with water. Understanding ARD requires understanding of the gas transfer mechanisms within the waste rock and the effect of other physical factors such as temperature and oxygen content. This report describes a study conducted to develop such an understanding. The work involved in-situ field measurements of bulk physical parameters known to be important in describing gas transport mechanisms that govern oxidation rates in waste rock piles. In addition, the FIDHELM computer model was used to model the gas transfer mechanisms that dominate the oxidation of the Heath Steele waste rock piles. Model parameters were based on data gathered in the field studies. The report then discusses oxidation mechanisms and ways to increase or inhibit oxidation rates. The appendix includes a description of the FIDHELM model and a user's guide, as well as field data and detailed FIDHELM results.

This study documents the fire history in a mixed hardwood stand located near one of the most heavily travelled corridors in Ontario, the Ottawa/Mattawa River route. The study site contains a mixture of sugar maple, red oak, birch, and other hardwoods; white pine, once dominant, has been nearly eliminated from the stand. The investigators sampled wood from remnant stumps of white pines that were harvested sometime in the late 1800s. They dated fire scars using dendrochronological methods, cross-dated a ring-width chronology within the site, and subsequently dated the chronology in absolute time with a nearby white pine chronology derived from old, living white pine near Hobbs Lake. A composite fire scar chronology is presented for 1721 to 1937 for an area under half a square kilometre near the Jocko and Ottawa rivers. The causes of the fires are also discussed.

Begins with a literature review on community economic development in general and on forestry-dependent communities. The literature is reviewed in the following terms: the financial market, traditional and non-traditional strategies for development, resource-dependent communities, and government roles and policies in economic development. The review is organised into topics including the role of entrepreneurship, urban community development in Canada, and local industrial development. The next sections examine selected measures of sustainable forestry and community development, and factors involved in northern Ontario community development. Finally, an input-output analytic model is presented for assessing impact on a community of expenditures on investment projects and other activities at the local and provincial level. The analysis is illustrated for a hypothetical case where the output of pulp and paper operations in Kapuskasing, Ontario is valued at $150 million. Economic impact results are supplemented by discussion of some general socio-economic indicators produced by the model.

Current health funding methodology in Alberta was developed for institutions and agencies in a governance model that no longer exists. This document proposes a new health funding framework for the province that is suited to the objectives of Alberta's health services restructuring and reform. It describes the principles to guide the development of a new funding methodology, and reviews system-wide issues that require consideration in the development, the scope of the funding base, and regional funding concepts. It then presents the proposed funding approach, in which comprehensive funding allocated to regions is divided into two broad pools: population needs-based funding allocated to each Regional Health Authority, and province-wide services. Relevant data on health expenditures is included. The document ends with a set of recommendations to the Minister of Health regarding the proposed funding framework.

Summarises geochemical and mineralogical properties of humus and till samples collected from sites located in the Separation Lake greenstone belt in north-western Ontario. Samples were subjected to geochemical, gold grain, and heavy mineral (metamorphosed magmatic sulphide indicator mineral) analysis. The samples were collected for orientation and regional surveys. The purpose of the orientation surveys was to characterise the geochemical and heavy mineral response in till samples over specific types of mineralisation. Mineralisation sites included gold, volcanogenic sulphide, magmatic sulphide, and rare-element pegmatite. Observations from these surveys are then applied to the geochemical and heavy mineral data derived from the regional survey in order to highlight areas of potential exploration interest. Several such sites are highlighted, including ten gold sites, 16 base metal sites, and three pegmatites.

caractéristiques essentielles de tous les types de gîtes minéraux d'importance économique au Canada. Ces résumés, qui traduisent l'état des connaissances actuelles sur les gîtes minéraux, concordent largement avec les définitions des types de gîtes d'usage courant. Chaque résumé débute par une présentation des principales caractéristiques géologiques permettant d'identifier les gîtes du type considéré, une énumération des substances utiles convenues dans les gisements et des exemples de gisements aussi bien au Canada qu'à l'étranger. Il se poursuit par un aperçu de l'importance économique des gisements du type considéré, une estimation de la taille et de la teneur de gisements représentatifs et une description des principales caractéristiques géologiques comme le cadre géologique, l'âge, la nature des roches hôtes et des roches associées, la forme des gisements, la répartition de la minéralisation, la minéralogie et l'altération. Suivent une brève description des modèles génétiques, une discussion portant sur les types de gîtes apparentés et une liste de guides pour l'exploration. Enfin, des références et une bibliographie choisies renvoient à la littérature scientifique la plus pertinente.

Geology and mineral deposits of the Red Lake area

By H. Clare Horwood. Toronto : Dept. of Mines, 1945. vii, 231 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl. Published as vol. XLIX, part II, of the Ontario Dept. of Mines annual report, 1940.

MICROLOG 96-06889 (4 fiche)

The Red Lake area lies in north-western Ontario in the Kenora district, and is known for its gold-producing deposits. This report begins with an overview of the area's physiography and drainage, access routes, climate, natural resources, history of mine development, and gold production. It then describes the area's general geology (Precambrian volcanics, greenstones, sediments, metamorphic rocks, and intrusives; Pleistocene glacial deposits; geologic history; structural geology; and economic geology (gold and other types of mineralisation, ore structures, prospecting possibilities). The bulk of the report contains details of the area's gold mines and mineral properties, including (where available) descriptions of mine geology, ore structure and mineralogy, development work, production and operating statistics, and mineralisation).

The area described in this report covers about 517 square miles in the vicinity of Atikokan, Ontario, in the Rainy River district. The area has been extensively prospected and a number of iron and gold mines had been operating in the area around the turn of the century. A discovery of a hematite body under Steeprock Lake in 1937 reawakened interest in the area. This report describes the area's natural resources, topography, general geology (Precambrian volcanics, intrusives, sediments), structural geology (folding, faulting), and economic geology. It includes descriptions of mining properties, claims, and the iron deposits of Steeprock Lake (including their general geology, structural geology, composition, and origin) as well as a section presenting results of magnetic and electrical surveys conducted at the lake 1938-39.

The objective of this volume is to define and summarise in a brief and systematic manner the essential characteristics of all economically significant types of Canadian mineral deposits. Each deposit type summary begins by identifying the main diagnostic geological characteristics, the contained commodities, and examples of deposits of that type (both Canadian and foreign). It then outlines the economic significance, typical size and grade of deposits, and geological features such as geological setting, age, host and associated rocks, form and distribution of mineralisation, mineralogy, and alteration. Genetic models, related deposit types, and guides to exploration are also reviewed. The volume describes 28 deposit types, including placers, stratiform iron, residually enriched deposits, base metal sulphides, vein uranium and silver, evaporites, lode gold, vein copper, skarn deposits, pegmatites, diamond deposits, and magmatic deposits.

Geology of the Cambro-Ordovician carbonate shelf and coeval off-shelf rocks, southwest of Corner Brook, western Newfoundland

By I. Knight. St. John's : Dept. of Natural Resources, Geological Survey, 1996. 38 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl. (Open file / Newfoundland. Geological Survey Branch ; NFDL 2602)

MICROLOG 96-06997 (1 fiche)

Low-grade metamorphosed sedimentary rocks south-west of Corner Brook, Newfoundland, form part of a complex foreland fold-and-thrust belt that deformed lower Palaeozoic rocks of the Laurentian margin. Cambro-Ordovician carbonate shelf rocks and coeval deeper-water rocks of the Pinchgut Lake group were carried together north-westward on a major thrust above terrigenous foreland-basin rocks. Mapping outlines a major, northeast-trending and plunging antiformal stack lying between the Humber Arm Allochthon to the west and higher grade metasedimentary and basement-cover domains to the east. This report describes the lithostratigraphy of the carbonate sequence and the Pinchgut Lake group, details the main structural elements of the area, compares the area to other map areas of western Newfoundland, and discusses both lithostratigraphic and structural implications. Finally, it documents the economic potential of the area, focusing on the area's significant variety of marbles.

The report itself does not attempt to make judgements about either the appropriateness of government policy objectives or the effectiveness of the various tax provisions in achieving those objectives. The 1st part of the report discusses the tax expenditure concept in order to facilitate understanding of the quantitative estimates. It also discusses the calculation and interpretation of the costs of tax expenditures, including key assumptions used. The 2nd part presents estimates of the costs of tax expenditures and memorandum items in the personal and corporate income tax systems and the GST. The report also includes several appendices. Descriptions of each tax expenditure as well as information on data sources and methodology used in constructing the estimates are presented for personal, then for corporate taxes, and finally for the GST.

A grade-tonnage deposit model represents the distribution and the statistical relationships of the pre-production tonnages and the average grades of the commodities of well-explored deposits of a particular mineral deposit type. The purpose of constructing such a model is to further define some of the more common mineral deposit types that occur in Ontario. This report documents 16 such grade-tonnage deposit models, representing Ontario deposit types for which there are no available or adequate models from the United States Geological Survey. The deposit types include: lode gold, Archean volcanic-associated massive sulphide, volcanic-hosted copper, paleoplacer uranium, stratiform chromite, Precambrian porphyry, lithium and uranium pegmatites, taic, magnesite, Cobalt type silver-sulpharsenide vein, Canadian komatiite-hosted nickel-copper, and mafic intrusion-hosted titanium-iron-vanadium-phosphorus.

This document has been prepared for the purpose of giving general guidance on conducting both human health and ecological risk assessment for site cleanups in Ontario. The first part is a general introduction to the process of risk assessment. It describes the role of risk assessment in the site remediation decision process often followed in Ontario, provides guidance for the selection of a qualified individual or group for the conduct of site-specific risk assessment, and formulates Ministry of Environment & Energy requirements regarding third-party review. The second part contains general guidelines on conducting human health risk assessment for the remediation of contaminated sites, and the third part provides a basic framework for conducting site-specific ecological risk assessments for the remediation of contaminated sites. The second and third parts are not exhaustive protocols or methodologies, but are statements of basic principles and general requirements.

Peut-on réellement gérer une crise? En bref, oui, à condition d'accepter trois préceptes fondamentaux : les crises sont inévitables; comme tout autre défi en matière de gestion, les crises doivent être anticipées, du moins de façon générale, c'est-à-dire qu'il faut s'entendre à l'avance sur certaines procédures courantes à suivre en cas de crise; et, la gestion des crises fait partie intégrante de la responsabilité de tout gestionnaire. Ce guide d'introduction est fondé sur ces préceptes. Il renferme un ensemble d'observations et de leçons tirées d'expériences vécues par des gestionnaires des secteurs public et privé qui sont passés par diverses crises. Il offre une synthèse de ces expériences.

Provides information on all fish habitat compensation, restoration, and creation projects undertaken in the Fraser River estuary between 1983 and 1993. Data are summarised to determine whether the principle of no net loss of subtidal, mudflat, marsh, and riparian habitat is being applied and achieved. The review of data is based on the net surface area losses or gains in subtidal, mudflat, and marsh habitats, and in the net linear loss or gain of riparian habitat (excluding losses or gains due to natural accretion or erosion). To understand why some habitat compensation did or did not achieve no net loss, some specific projects are examined according to physical, biological, and procedural criteria. Opportunities for improvement are noted and issues raised during the review are discussed along with recommendations for improving the habitat compensation process. The appendix contains outlines of the features and accomplishments of all the 1983-93 projects.

Nova Scotia is restructuring its health care system, and as part of this initiative, it is also reorganising and implementing a new regional management system. An important part of this system is a new information system to support the province's new vision for health care delivery and management. This document presents a strategy for the new information system. It begins with a proposed vision for health information resources in Nova Scotia and an overview of health information systems in Canada and major systems initiatives under way in Nova Scotia. It then describes the current health system business environment as a context for the new information systems strategy. Subsequent chapters propose the new strategy, describe information system human resources needs and organisational structures, estimate investment requirements, and discuss the benefits and returns from the new system. Appendices in volume 2 provide supporting information, such as detailed tables of the business model used in developing the strategy, information needs identified by focus groups, health data standards, and application system descriptions.

Heath Steele Mines in New Brunswick produces concentrates containing lead, zinc, copper, silver, and minor gold from several ore lenses. The operation is essentially a zinc mine which produces by-products of copper, lead, and silver. This report presents a study carried out to determine the amount of mineable or potentially mineable copper reserves which occur as discrete zones of copper-rich mineralisation on the Heath Steele property. Study methodology included analyses of diamond drill hole data and calculation of reserves based on stope layouts on each mining section, designed similar to typical longhole open stopes at Heath Steele. Reserves for each block of the stope (upper and undercut) are included separately in the study so that areas which are sub-ore grade can be dropped from final stope layouts.

Describes a hydraulic flood routing model developed to accurately model the open water river discharge of moderate floods. The model is capable of modelling the open water discharge at intermediate sites along the Peace River where no discharge data exist. The final geometric model consists of over 1,100 computational nodes describing channel width, effective bed elevation, and channel roughness. The hydraulic flood routing model used was the cdg-1D finite element model developed at the University of Alberta. The model provides for a solution of the fully dynamic, one-dimensional open channel flow equations. In its first stage, the model covers the Peace River from Hudson's Hope to Peace Point; subsequent work will focus on extending the model to the Slave River delta and collecting additional cross-section data on the Peace River.

A common perception since the 1970s was that lower flows on the Peace River resulting from regulation precluded the generation of flood levels that would inundate perched basins that are separated from the open-water flow system. However, some literature references and local inhabitants have said that ice jams also played a role in some flood events. The initial objective of this study was to determine the relative role of ice jams in flooding in the Peace-Athabasca Delta (PAD). Assuming ice jams to be a significant factor, a second objective was to determine the hydrometeorological conditions that lead to their generation near the PAD and a third objective was to determine what role flow regulation has had on their formation. The study uses analysis of hydrometric data in conjunction with various historical and local sources to show the extent to which open water floods could flood the higher elevations in the PAD.

The authors demonstrate how the new medium can augment active and purposeful collaborative learning through its place-independent, interactive, and text-based nature. The new medium is conceptualised as a form of hypertext, or a non-linear networking of textual information and an ability to use that information along multiple paths and perspectives. The application of hypertext theory and practice is determining how the capabilities and interfaces of educational computer systems might be redesigned.

Discusses results from artificial stream experiments in relation to the effects of effluent stressors and nutrient enrichment on benthic algal and invertebrate communities; also compares results from autumn 1993 and 1994 to document between-year variability in the relationships between effluent additions, and effects on primary and secondary producers. Results from spring 1994 are contrasted with those from autumn 1993 and 1994 to assess the importance of seasonal changes in moderating the nutrient-contaminant effects on benthic food web interactions. The artificial stream experiments were designed to decouple the effects on the riverine food web of the potentially confounding effects of nutrients and contaminants within effluent. By comparing the effects of nutrient and effluent treatments on different trophic components of the food web, the study was able to provide a mechanistic understanding of the stimulatory and/or inhibitory effects of pulp mill effluents on the benthic food webs of the Athabasca River.

The undirected rural postman problem (URPP) arises in contexts where a single vehicle must service streets for such purposes as garbage collection, snow removal, and mail delivery, and no side constraints are present. This paper describes a number of improvement procedures for the URPP, in the form of a family of post-optimisation heuristics. A number of basic procedures used in the construction of algorithms are reviewed, the algorithms themselves are presented, and computational results are reported for randomly generated graphs.

Improving children's writing : topic interestingness and structural considerations

By Suzanne Hidi and John A. McLaren. Toronto : Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, 1989. 89 p. : Bibl. (OISE project / Ontario Institute for Studies in Education ; 84-1058) ON-TERIS ON05829

The first study described in this paper sought to examine whether topic interest can facilitate children's writing performance. It investigated whether tutorial intervention was effective in the utilisation of high interest topics; whether children wrote quantitatively more or better after studying topic-relevant information in the high interest condition; and whether supplementing children's knowledge of topics they already know a lot about facilitates their writing performance, even if they consider the topics to be boring. The second study examined the relationship between children's writing, learning, and structural complexity of top-level organisations of ideas such as causation, comparison/contrast, and problem/solution. The results indicate the ability of children to process complex rhetorical structures, and have relevance for curriculum development and for what should be taught to beginning writers.

Documents the environmental effects of two mining operations on receiving waters in the Manitouwadge area of Ontario. Investigative work included field bioassays using rainbow trout at various receiving water locations adjacent to the mine sites. Those tests measured acute fish lethality over an initial 96-hour period, and chronic toxicity involving the potential for histological damage to the surviving fish over a further ten-day exposure. Some of the fish were analysed for bioconcentration of heavy metals. Laboratory bioassays (on fish and Daphnia) were also performed on grab samples of tailings effluent.

This report contains a partial inventory and preliminary evaluation of the aggregate resource potential of the Nipissing diabase, which underlies about 2.5-3% of a study area located along Highway 17 between Massey and Blind River, north of Manitoulin Island. It includes results of aggregate quality testing of grab samples from selected diabase bodies throughout the area. Sites for sampling were selected on the basis of access, potential size, exposure, and simplicity of structure.

The Kingcome Timber Supply Area (TSA) covers about 1.13 million hectares on northern Vancouver Island and adjacent mainland and islands. About 16% of the TSA land base is considered to be available for timber harvesting. After a brief description of the TSA, this report reviews the principles for determining the allowable annual cut for the TSA and presents an accounting of the factors and the rationale used in making that determination. These factors include the role of the base-case timber supply forecast, the land base contributing to the timber harvest, existing forest inventory, expected rate of growth, regeneration delay, silvicultural systems, decay and waste, integrated resource management objectives, the Vancouver Island Land Use Plan and Protected Areas Strategy, harvest flow, mill requirements, and socio-economic objectives. Begins with a review of existing training materials and courses developed for the lead-based paint abatement (LBPA) industry in the United States, evaluating the suitability of those materials for use in Canada. An LBPA training strategy for Canada is then designed and developed, based on a series of assumptions of which the most important is that knowledge of risk reduction techniques as well as abatement techniques needs to be built into the courses. Key technical issues that would affect the training courses are discussed. Finally, a Canada-wide implementation strategy for the proposed training courses and a consumer information seminar is proposed. Appendices include a discussion of course evaluation criteria, course outlines, and a consumer seminar outline.

Provides a synopsis, based on expert opinion, of current scientific views on the potential impact of full-tree and tree-length harvesting on site productivity in boreal jack pine & black spruce forests. Expert opinion was solicited by questionnaire and at 4 workshops conducted on the nature of harvesting impacts on boreal forest productivity and on alternative strategies that would maintain site productivity. At the broadest level, the most important issues were: species shifts; changes in percent organic matter; and physical site disturbances, including altered hydrology and rutting. The appendix includes a copy of the survey questionnaire.

Mackenzie Timber Supply Area : rationale for allowable annual cut (AAC) determination, effective September 1, 1996

By Larry Pedersen. Victoria : Ministry of Forests, 1996. 53 p. : Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-06836 (1 fiche)

The Mackenzie Timber Supply Area (TSA) covers about 6.1 million hectares in north-east British Columbia, of which about 18% is considered to be available for timber harvesting. After a brief description of the TSA, this report reviews the principles for determining the allowable annual cut for the TSA and presents an accounting of the factors and the rationale used in making that determination. These factors include the role of the base-case timber supply forecast, the land base contributing to the timber harvest, existing forest inventory, expected rate of growth, regeneration delay, silvicultural systems, decay and waste, integrated resource management objectives, harvest flow, processing facilities, and socio-economic objectives. The appendix contains relevant sections from the British Columbia Forest Act and a summary of public input to the TSA Timber Supply Review.

Engineered barrier materials are an integral part of the proposed Canadian concept for the disposal of used nuclear waste. Components of these barriers, such as the buffer and backfill clays surrounding the waste containers, as well as granitic groundwater, naturally contain small quantities of organic material, and there is a question whether gas could be produced from these organics as a result of biological processes. This report describes four independent and replicated experiments with deep Shield groundwater, characteristic of vault resaturation water, to examine the degree of methane production under simulated vault conditions. The factors influencing methanogenesis and its inhibition in the presence of clay and crushed granite are also discussed.

The first part of this report begins with a history of exploration and development in the Michipicoten-Missinaibi area on the north-eastern margin of Lake Superior. It then reviews previous geological work in the area and describes the area's mining properties, gold mines, and mining claims. The second part describes an area located in the vicinity of Missinaibi, Ontario, including its topography, natural resources, general geology (Precambrian schists, intrusions, volcanics; Pleistocene and recent deposits), and mineral properties. The third part details the gold ore deposits of the Michipicoten area, beginning with a review of the area's general geology (Precambrian volcanics, intrusives, sediments), structural geology (folding, fracturing, faulting, intrusive structures), and economic geology. The general character and mineralogy of the gold deposits is then described, and details are presented on wall rock alteration, feldspar-carbonate veins, and ore genesis. The third part concludes with descriptions of mine properties on which underground work was carried out 1934-36. NR ON PR SC

In the Canadian disposal concept for underground burial of nuclear fuel waste in vaults excavated in plutonic rock of the Canadian shield, the extent and nature of the excavation disturbed zone adjacent to an underground opening are important concerns for both the operational safety and the sealing of a disposal vault. The Mine-By Experiment was conducted to investigate the complex processes involved in the formation of the excavation disturbed zone. This document provides an overview of the major findings from the excavation response phase (1989-95) of this Experiment, conducted at the Underground Research Laboratory in the Lac du Bonnet granite batholith in Manitoba. The document serves as an extended executive summary and presents some of the implications of the findings for vault design. The topics chosen for the essays reflect an early decision to focus primarily on the basic needs of people in rural areas of the developing world. Seven key issues are identified: gender equity in science and technology education; removing obstacles to women in scientific and technological careers; making science responsive to societal needs; making science and technology decision-making more gender-aware; relating better with local knowledge systems; addressing ethical issues; and improving collection of gender-disaggregated data for policymakers. Essay topics include food security, energy development, health, technology assessment, education, literacy, measurement of technology impacts, women in small business, and the gender dimension of information as a transformative tool. Needs-based planning for Manitoba's generalist physicians

Norali P. Roos...et al. Winnipeg : University of Manitoba, Faculty of Medicine, Dept. of Community Health Sciences, Manitoba Centre for Health Policy & Evaluation, 1996. vii, 131 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl. MICROLOG 96-06676 (2 fiche)

Needs-based planning for physician services involves taking account of the characteristics of the population in each area and the characteristics of local practising physicians. This report describes a needs-based planning approach for Manitoba physician services, focusing on those who deliver general care. The basic assumption underlying the approach is that in a capped funding environment such as that which exists in the province, it makes sense to attract physicians to areas where the population appears to have the greatest need and lowest supply. The study methodology involved dividing the province into 54 physician service areas based on actual physician use patterns, focusing on ambulatory visits. Each area's actual visit rate was compared to an estimate of their needed rate to determine each area's surplus or deficit of physicians. The analyses accounted for the different workloads of generalist physicians practising in different regions of the province; other factors such as availability of nursing stations were also reviewed. In addition, the study examined recent changes in Manitoba's physician supply as well as evidence concerning how patient and physician factors influence visit rates. Finally, policy directions suggested by the study findings are discussed.

Decreases in funding, new technology requiring investment, improved methods of communications and administration, and new initiatives with complementary organisations such as the public education system are providing both challenges and opportunities to the New Brunswick public library system. The province's Dept. of Municipalities, Culture & Housing accordingly believes that it is timely to undertake a thorough review of the library system. This document represents a first step in such a review, and is intended to provoke discussion to determine whether a modified system can improve the province's ability to channel funding to provide quality public library services. The paper is organised according to the four areas under review: roles and responsibilities of public libraries, service delivery mechanisms, funding issues, and organisational structure and governance. An overview of the current situation in each of these areas is provided, along with factors for future consideration and questions to be explored.

Presents findings and directions resulting from a comprehensive review of the workers' compensation system in Ontario. Three broad sections each provide a brief analysis of problems with the current system, summarise the feedback from the public consultation process that was part of the review, and recommend new directions for the system. The first section examines new approaches to managing compensation claims and the return-to-work process, and addresses the issue of appropriate level of compensation. The second section examines new approaches to entitlement to compensation and to delivering an efficient and effective service to employees and employers; it also reviews the need to expand workers' compensation coverage to ensure that the collective liability pool remains solvent. The third section considers adjustments to the benefit and the revenue sides of the system needed to ensure full funding is achieved by 2014.

Synthesises results from research and monitoring studies undertaken to characterise nutrient loading from all point and diffuse sources in northern Alberta river basins. Also evaluates the impacts of nutrient loading on river chemistry, assesses the response of riverine biota to nutrient loading from pulp mill and municipal effluents, quantifies nutrient responses of benthic biota, and investigates interactions between nutrients and contaminants in pulp mill effluents on food webs. The findings are used to assess the state of aquatic ecosystem health and to develop scientific and management recommendations for the northern river basins.

Presents a review of the environmental and socio-economic effects of a diamond mining project proposed by BHP Diamonds Inc. and the Blackwater Group. The project involves open pit and underground mining of five diamondiferous deposits located about 300 kilometres north-east of Yellowknife, Northwest Territories. The review process included 18 days of public hearings and receipt of submissions from interested parties. General issues considered in the review include the adequacy of baseline information, Aboriginal rights and land claims, the value of traditional knowledge in environmental assessment, and corporate accountability. Specific issues discussed include those related to project engineering and management, such as tailings management; environmental issues relating to such matters as water quality and wildlife; and socio-economic issues, including economic impact of the project, participation of northerners, and social/cultural disruption.

This paper presents a truly practical and provably optimal  $O(n \log h)$  time output-sensitive algorithm for the planar convex hull problem, perhaps the most studied problem in computational geometry. The basic algorithm is similar to that presented in Chan, Snoeyink and Yap (1995) where the median-finding step is replaced by an approximate median. The authors analyse two such schemes and, for both methods, demonstrate the algorithm running time and its probability of deviation from expected running time.

This report is a first step in assessing some of the economic costs of violence against women in British Columbia. The report and its resulting cost estimates cover primarily some short-term consequences of male violence. Study methodology included reviews of previous reports on family violence in the province, a review of a wide range of literature on violence against women, and examination of budgetary data of government ministries providing services related to violence against women. The report provides details on 11 cost estimates of consequences of violence against women; in each case, the estimation methodology is described, limitations of the estimate are discussed, and comparisons are made with other studies. The estimated costs relate to policing, corrections, criminal injury compensation, victim assistance, counselling, Aboriginal programs, mental health care, alcohol and drug treatment, income assistance, transition houses, sexual and woman assault centres, women's loss of work time, programs for children who witness abuse, and treatment programs for assaultive men. The report ends with discussion of consequences examined but not quantified: emergency medical care and intergenerational effects of violence.

The evaluation concentrated on the peat resource characteristics to determine the extent of reserves suitable to development and to obtain an understanding of the bog hydrology. This assessment would facilitate bog development in a manner that minimises environmental impacts. The work included an assessment of resource characteristics at selected locations on the bog; the field investigations included evaluations of peat depth and quality, surface elevations, and elevations of the base of the peat. The investigation provided an improved definition of suitable areas of peat reserves for a proposed expansion of the Malpec Peat Moss operation. In addition, existing restoration activities were assessed to assist in the development of techniques for future restoration of the bog.

Ce document donne une vue d'ensemble de la structure et du rendement des pêches commerciales au Canada, et indique la place qu'occupe l'industrie canadienne dans le monde pour le commerce des produits de la pêche et la production du poisson par rapport aux autres principaux pays pêcheurs. On y décrit la position du Canada sur le plan international, la demande des produits de poisson au Canada et aux États-Unis, l'importance de l'industrie de la pêche par rapport à d'autres secteurs de l'économie canadienne et la participation du Canada et d'autres pays aux pêches du nord-ouest de l'Atlantique et du nord-est du Pacifique. Finalement, on se penche sur la structure des débarquements et des revenus bruts des pêcheurs, de la production et des recettes brutes tirées des produits de la pêche canadienne, de l'emploi des pêcheurs et des travailleurs d'usine, et le nombre de bateaux que représente la flotte de pêche canadienne, ainsi que des importations et des exportations des produits de la pêche par les principaux pays.

Ce document vise à susciter la discussion sur certaines des questions fondamentales qui déterminent les priorités à l'égard de l'éducation post-secondaire. Si les considérations financières sont à l'origine d'un certain nombre de ces questions, elles ne constituent pas le principal objet de ce document. L'analyse et la discussion recherchées ont pour but la formulation de lignes directrices qui nous aideront à atteindre les objectifs que nous jugeons essentiels pour le système d'éducation post-secondaire de la province. Ces objectifs sont : l'excellence; l'accès à l'éducation postsecondaire pour tous les élèves admissibles; la satisfaction des besoins divers des étudiantes et des étudiants au moyen de programmes et d'établissements variés; l'obligation redditionnelle à l'égard des usagers du système et des contribuables en général; et la capacité d'adaptation aux exigences et circonstances nouvelles. Ce document aborde tous les points mentionnés ci-dessus.

The objective of this paper is to identify some of the main issues in freight transportation planning and operations, and to present appropriate operations research models, methods, and computer-based planning tools. It begins by reviewing the contemporary environment of the freight transportation sector, its main players, and a general decision-making framework. The paper then presents the issues organised under three planning levels: strategic, tactical, and operational. In each case, the paper identifies the major players, describes the problem and main related questions, and reviews how the questions have been addressed through the development of operations research models, methods, and computer systems. The review includes such tools as location models, network design models, regional planning methods, network optimisation models, vehicle routing algorithms, dynamic models, and stochastic vehicle routing.

Policy on the criminal justice system response to violence against women and children : violence against women in relationships policy -- Updated

British Columbia. Ministry of Attorney General. Victoria : The Ministry, 1996. 26 p.
MICROLOG 96-06842 (1 fiche)

This policy directs the British Columbia justice system to emphasise the criminality of violence within relationships and to take the necessary measures to ensure the protection of women and children who may be at risk. The policy relates to the continuum of violence that occurs in relationships and applies to a range of criminal activities ranging from harassing telephone calls to aggravated assault. The policy approach emphasises the need for arrest and rigorous prosecution of offences of violence against women in relationships, and attempts to balance the demands of the criminal justice system with the best interests of the victim. Sections of the policy relate to the role of police, Crown counsel, correctional services, victim services programs, and justices of the peace and trial co-ordinators.

The barge Irving Whale sank in September 1970 in the south-western Gulf of St. Lawrence, carrying fuel oil in its tanks and about 9 tonnes of a fluid containing polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) in its heating system. This report describes the potential consequences of a possible PCB spill from the barge on the marine environment of the Gulf. Sections of the report cover the physical characteristics and fisheries resources of the Gulf, general information on PCBs and chlorobenzenes, the distribution of PCBs in the St. Lawrence estuary and gulf, and the initial and possible present location of PCBs from the barge. The report then analyses environmental consequences of a PCB spill under three scenarios: a slow intermittent or continuous leak, and major spills close to the bottom or to the surface during barge salvage operations. The report concludes with proposals for a monitoring program in light of the available information and research needs on PCBs in the Gulf and in the vicinity of the barge.

Developing new or improved products is becoming increasingly more important for management of manufacturing companies. The life cycle of products is shorter than it used to be and requires constant vigilance. This is obvious with high-technology products, but also applies more and more to most other products as well. Developing or improving a product requires time, people, money and thought. This brochure offers you ways to make your next project more successful by suggesting simple, practical tools for designing, planning and managing a product development project.

Proposed provincial policy for development on flood plains

New Brunswick. Fredericton: The Province, 1996. II, 20, II, 23 p. Bilingual (Directive provinciale proposée concernant...).
MICROLOG 96-06490 (1 fiche)

Flooding, and the damage associated with it, is an historic problem in New Brunswick. The consequences of flooding, however, have become more severe with increasing population and development pressures in areas that are prone to flooding. This policy arises from several recommendations on flood plain management made by the Commission on Land Use and The Rural Environment, and builds upon the achievements of the federal-provincial program, particularly in flood risk mapping. The policy reflects the overall position of the provincial government; specific guidelines to assist appropriate planning authorities in carrying out their duties accompany this document. Both the policy and guidelines represent the minimum level of controls required in all flood prone areas in the province.

Proposed regulatory standards for new landfilling sites accepting non-hazardous waste

Toronto: Ministry of Environment & Energy, Waste Reduction Branch, 1996. 2 v. : III. Contents: Vol. 1: Background - vol. 2: Appendix A. MICROLOG 96-06744 (1 fiche)

Proposes new detailed landfill standards for Ontario which will ensure that new landfills are second to none in the protection they provide to the environment. By making current requirements more explicit and introducing standards in new areas, the new standards will bring clarity and certainty to the landfill approvals process. The new standards include requirements for location, design, operation, and closure of sites, and apply to all new or expanded landfilling sites (except small sites) accepting non-hazardous wastes. The standards cover such issues as location restrictions in the area of public airports, hazardous lands, and natural heritage features; requirements for assessment of hydrogeologic and surface water conditions; design specifications; leachate management; minimum operating and monitoring requirements; mandatory air emissions controls; closure and post-closure care; and financial assurance for private sector facilities.

Protection for Person in Care Act : a discussion guide

Alberta. Alberta Community Development. Edmonton : The Dept., 1996. 20 p.
MICROLOG 96-06861 (1 fiche)

This guide is meant to provide an overview of the efforts of the Working Group on Protection for Persons in Care and to encourage informed public participation at regional meetings regarding the content and implementation of the Alberta Protection for Person in Care Act. The Working Group was established to assist in implementation of that Act, and the guide reviews the purpose of the Act and some of its provisions. It also outlines procedures for participation in regional meetings (July-August 1996) and sets out questions for discussion (with spaces for comments provided). These questions relate to such issues as the definition of abuse, the types of abuse to be included or excluded from the definition, the requirement of a criminal records check for service providers, the definition of a person in care, and informing people about the Act. The text of the Act is also provided.

The draft Lake Trout Rehabilitation Plan for Lake Huron is intended to provide long-term direction for the rehabilitation of lake trout in the Canadian part of the lake. In order to gauge public support for the plan, copies of the draft were circulated along with a comprehensive questionnaire to various stakeholders including individuals, First Nations, angler clubs, fish producer association members, municipalities, and environmental groups. Although primarily directed at lake trout, the questionnaire also contained questions that assessed attitudes related to approaches to ecosystem and fisheries management. This report presents the results of the questionnaire survey, including the degree of support for the goal of lake trout rehabilitation, for various types of fishing regulations, and for objectives of the draft plan. The report concludes with recommendations regarding implementation of the plan.

The objective of this study was to determine the wood pulping characteristics and pulp properties of selected aspen clones and poplar hybrids relative to those of the trembling aspen commercially harvested in Alberta. The investigators tested two aspen clones and two hybrid poplars having significantly higher growth rates than those of presently commercially harvested aspen/poplar. They measured the wood characteristics and carried out kraft pulping and bleaching in laboratory pulping equipment. Results presented include pulp yield and quality, pulp mechanical properties, and economic benefits.

As a result of changes in the ways that organisations conduct business, the nature of work is changing, and a number of alternatives to the traditional work contract with a single employer are becoming more prominent. These changes provide opportunities for those who engage in career counselling. This counsellor's guide begins with a historical perspective on the meaning of work in contemporary Western society, a brief review of current and future perspectives on work, and a comment on the impact of such perspectives. The subsequent section addresses how counsellors can help clients explore and plan for work alternatives such as job sharing, talent pooling, contracting, consulting, and entrepreneurship. The guide then reviews a general approach to career planning, followed by specific strategies for engaging clients in an exploration of work alternatives. The final section provides examples of how clients can be helped to plan for and implement work alternatives. The companion volume contains a collection of research notes and bibliography.

Cette étude porte sur les résultats de l'équité salariale chez les employeurs du secteur privé qui comptaient de 50 à 99 employés en 1987. Les données ont été recueillies en deux étapes, d'octobre à décembre 1992. La première étape de la collecte a consisté en un sondage téléphonique effectué auprès d'employeurs admissibles. Des renseignements sur les caractéristiques des employeurs et des renseignements de base sur la mise en œuvre de l'équité salariale ont été recueillis lors d'entrevues téléphoniques avec 928 employeurs portant sur 990 établissements assujettis à l'équité salariale. Afin de recueillir des renseignements plus détaillés sur la mise en œuvre de l'équité salariale dans les établissements, un questionnaire de suivi a été envoyé à tous les établissements interrogés lors du sondage téléphonique. Au total, 266 établissements ont rempli ce questionnaire. Ils ont également fourni des renseignements sur 127 programmes d'équité salariale déjà achevés comprenant des catégories d'emplois à prédominance féminine. Les constatations figurant dans ce rapport sont tirées des renseignements recueillis au cours des deux étapes du sondage.

The St. Lawrence River. How does it affect the health of those who live near it? Is the water safe to drink? Are the fish safe to eat? Should people avoid using the river for recreation? Do contaminants pose a health risk? These are some of the questions addressed in a new program, the Health Component of St. Lawrence Vision 2000. The Health Component's activities can be grouped under four main headings: assessing exposure to river contaminants; studying relationships - contaminants and human health; defining risks - protecting and promoting health; and, determining priorities - clean-up and environmental protection. Quels sont les effets des eaux du Saint-Laurent sur la santé des riverains? Peut-on boire l'eau puisée au fleuve ou consommer le poisson qu'on y pêche? Devrait-on éviter d'y pratiquer des activités nautiques? Les niveaux de contaminants posent-ils actuellement des problèmes pour la santé? Autant de questions qui font l'objet d'études dans le cadre du volet Santé de Saint-Laurent Vision 2000. L'objectif principal du volet Santé est la protection de la santé des riverains et des utilisateurs des ressources du fleuve contre les effets de l'exposition aux contaminants qui se trouvent dans le bassin fluvial. Les activités entreprises dans le cadre de ce volet se regroupent sous quatre thèmes : dresser un bilan de l'exposition des riverains aux contaminants qui se trouvent dans le fleuve; étudier le rapport entre les contaminants et la santé; définir les risques qui sont associés à l'usage du fleuve afin de pouvoir appliquer des mesures de protection et de promotion de la santé; et, déterminer les priorités en matière de dépollution et de protection de l'environnement.

In May 1994, John Ryan Turner died from physical and psychological deprivation at the hands of his parents, despite extensive involvement of various human service professionals in New Brunswick. No intervention was sufficient to prevent the child's death. This report presents the findings of a review conducted to determine whether Family Community Social Services Division adhered to departmental policies and procedures as they relate to the above case; and to review those policies and procedures relating to child protection in the context of that case, in order to determine whether any change is warranted. The review included a review of case documentation, internal agency documents relating to the case, provincial child protection standards and legislation, child victims of abuse protocols, and the transcript of the trial of Steven and Lorelei Turner, the parents. The findings include recommendations regarding child care services and child protection in the province.

This study has three main objectives: to describe the barriers experienced by ethnocultural minority women who are victims of spousal assault in trying to access or utilise the criminal justice system; to describe and analyse the response of women from different ethnocultural minorities to the mandatory charge/arrest policy; and to identify elements of a new model for increasing access to the criminal justice system for ethnocultural minority women who are victims of spousal assault. The study methodology involved interviews with respondents who work directly with such women or who were knowledgeable about spousal assault issues. Specific barriers discussed include those related to cultural beliefs and practices, perceptions of or experiences with the criminal justice system, and availability of and access to justice-related community services. Results are used to propose modifications to the criminal justice system to address the concerns of ethnocultural minority women. The appendix includes an interview format used in the study.

The panel distributed the EIS for review and, in response to criticism of the EIS received from various parties, requested from AECL written response to the issues raised. This document contains that response, not only to issues raised by the panel but also to other long-term safety issues raised by other agencies and review groups. The issues are categorised by topic, with quoted excerpts from the submissions that define each issue along with the AECL response. Topics addressed in the response include the overall concept, the approach to safety assessment, alternative container materials and designs, the role of backfill as a barrier, the relevance of timing of resaturation, the use of natural analogues, vault layouts, effects on the biosphere and geosphere, site selection, and postclosure assessment methodology. This discussion paper outlines over 80 proposals to reform environment and energy regulations in Ontario to make them more responsive to the demands of the 1990s. These proposals involve initiatives such as elimination of obsolete regulations, consolidation of existing regulations, harmonising of federal and provincial requirements, and amending regulations to account for new circumstances. Directions for change are outlined with regard to air and water quality, environmental approvals, energy, environmental assessment, the Environmental Bill of Rights, the Niagara Escarpment, pesticides, spills, training, certification, licensing and accreditation, waste management, and the regulatory process. The paper also proposes alternatives to regulation such as codes of practice, economic instruments, performance agreements, promotion of voluntary action, and expanding industry adoption of environmental management systems. Un inventaire réalisé sur les rives du Saint-Laurent entre Cornwall et l'île d'Orléans à l'été 1994 a permis de constater que 397 km de rives naturelles sont en érosion et que 684 km de rives sont recouvertes de structures conventionnelles de protection telles que les murs de béton ou les enrochements. Il ne reste plus que 451 km de rives naturelles stables dans ce secteur. Cette dégradation, due à une combinaison de facteurs humains et naturels, entraîne une diminution des potentiels écologiques et économiques des milieux riverains du Saint-Laurent. This study examines the complex issue of employee turnover in British Columbia municipal police agencies. Study objectives were: to explore and identify motivators for voluntary departure for both men and women; to examine sex differences in intent to leave; and to provide practical suggestions for improving retention, morale, and productivity of municipal police officers. Study methodology included a literature review, interviews, a survey of 12 police departments, and consultations with police agencies and researchers in Canada and other countries. Sections of the study review research on turnover in Canada, the United States, and Britain; examine numbers of British Columbia police officers considering leaving the force, along with male and female officers' reasons; review human resource management practices, including performance appraisals, internal mobility, and career development initiatives; and review factors related to turnover of female police officers, such as work/family issues, sexual harassment, sex role stereotyping, tokenism, and relationships with management. The report concludes with a comprehensive retention plan for police departments and appropriate recommendations.

The purpose of the study was to describe the processes followed to apply for, grant (if appropriate), and enforce these two types of so-called peace bonds. The use and effectiveness of peace bonds is currently seen as an important issue due in part to the perception that they are frequently employed by women seeking protection from assault from an abusive male partner or spouse. Study methodology involved interviews with criminal justice personnel, lawyers, judges, court administrators, and other interested parties in Ottawa, Calgary, and Cochrane (Alberta). Issues considered in the study include defendant/applicant profiles, accessibility, timeliness, breaches of orders, and enforcement.

Ce rapport a pour objet de décrire un large éventail de facteurs qui touchent la santé des Ontariens au moyen de données tirées principalement de l'Enquête sur la santé en Ontario. Des études antérieures avaient examiné les liens entre l'état de santé et deux facteurs : les comportements posant des risques pour la santé et l'utilisation des soins de santé. Peu d'études ont tenté d'examiner un plus large éventail de facteurs sociaux et économiques qui pourraient influencer la santé, à savoir : la pauvreté, le chômage, l'éducation, les conditions de vie et de travail, les familles et les amis, la salubrité des lieux de travail, le soutien social et l'environnement. Par conséquent, une approche globale a été adoptée pour illustrer les facteurs qui peuvent influencer sur la santé des Ontariens ainsi que les nombreuses améliorations qui peuvent être apportées en tenant compte de cet ensemble élargi de facteurs déterminants. Ce rapport a pour objet d'examiner les liens entre chacun de ces facteurs et la santé des Ontariens et de voir quelles répercussions ces facteurs peuvent avoir sur les programmes et politiques. Il est divisé en sept chapitres, chacun portant sur un seul ensemble de facteurs sociaux, économiques ou environnementaux.

Compiled by Patricia Allen, Fidèle Thériault and Michael Nicholas. Fredericton : Archaeological Services Branch, 1994. 95 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-06492 (2 fiche)

Rocks Provincial Park is located on the shore of the Bay of Fundy in south-eastern New Brunswick. The park features a number of flowerpot-like rock formations and has a number of archaeological sites. This report begins with a review of the park's historical background from pre-European times to the early 20th century. It then describes five significant archaeological sites in the park and makes recommendations for their preservation. Appendices include texts of relevant historical documents and lists of archaeological specimens found in the park.

Safety audits in housing are a process which brings individuals together to walk through a physical environment, evaluate how safe it feels to them, and identify ways to make the space safer and organise to bring about those changes. This report assesses the current use of safety audits in reducing violence aimed at women & in reducing crime in general, and identifies the strengths and limitations of the safety audit process as it currently exists. The assessment methodology included a widely distributed written survey and a limited number of in-depth interviews. The survey was designed to solicit a wide range of information on the use of safety audits across Canada and was sent to individuals and organisations identified as possibly having knowledge of, or some involvement with, safety audits in their area. Several elements of successful safety audits are identified and recommendations are made regarding the effective use of safety audits in housing.

Mineral deposit profiles are concise descriptions of a group of deposits with common characteristics tied to a series of headings which will commonly fit on less than five pages. They are designed to be primarily descriptive because the ore-forming processes are sometimes poorly understood. The profiles presented in this document are intended to describe the deposit type anywhere in the world. However, they incorporate more information specific to British Columbia with respect to tectonic setting, age of mineralisation, examples, references, resource data, and economic factors. The profiles are based on a combination of published information, authors' personal knowledge, and information provided informally by industry geologists. Types of deposits described include volcanic, sediment-hosted, epithermal, vein, polymetallic, and intrusion-associated.

Delivered by Commissioner J. Kenneth McKinnon. Whitehorse : The Territory, 1994. 26 p. MICROLOG 96-06587 (1 fiche)

This speech discusses the six major priorities the Yukon government has established to face the future. They are: balancing economic development with environmental protection; developing energy, transportation and tourism infrastructure, policies and programs to support the mining industry; the provision of quality education and technical training; completing land claims and negotiating the transfer of control of Yukon affairs; improving quality of life by creating healthy, vibrant communities; and continuing the approach to good government. ### Spring water and spring sediment geochemistry of the Gataga Mountain area, parts of 94L/7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15

By Raymond E. Lett, Wayne Jackaman and Steven J. Sibbick. Victoria : Ministry of Employment & Investment, Energy & Minerals Division, Geological Survey Branch, 1996. 25 p. : Maps, Bibl. (Open file / British Columbia. Geological Survey Branch : 1996-30 ISSN 0835-3530) ISBN 0-7726-2935-8 MICROLOG 96-06838 (1 fiche)

Describes a study in which samples of spring water and spring sediment were collected from an area around Gataga Mountain in north-eastern British Columbia to test the exploration potential of groundwater chemistry for base metal deposits. The spring water samples were analysed for such elements as aluminium, antimony, cadmium, copper, iron, lead, manganese, nickel, potassium, silicon, thorium, vanadium, and zinc by inductively coupled plasma mass spectroscopy. The water samples were also analysed for pH, conductivity, fluoride, and sulphate. Sediment samples were also analysed for various elements by neutron activation, atomic absorption spectroscopy, and ion-selective electrode methods. Several springs in the study area were found to have anomalous contents of certain metals. BC NR PR SC

This report provides factual and analytical information about Canada's forests, and addresses topics and issues important to the development of the Canadian forest sector. In addition to providing an annual overview on the state of Canadian forestry, the report places particular emphasis on Canada's forests as a source of commercial timber, and on management and environmental issues related to timber production. A national forest account is introduced to show the changes in the forest resource as it is depleted by harvesting, fire and insects, and replenished through reforestation and intensive management activities. Data are included from the mid-1970s to the present on exports by province and their value, their contribution to the balance of trade, employment, and types of materials produced. CA FO ND SC ST

Before the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms was enacted, the provinces alone determined what the language of instruction would be in the public schools. When the Charter was proclaimed on April 17, 1982, it brought a new dimension to the Canadian educational system; the right to instruction in the minority language that is now entrenched in the Constitution. This study deals with the current situation in Canada with respect to minority-language instruction and the management of educational facilities by official-language minority groups. First, we look at the parameters within which these rights are exercised, and then we examine the current situation in each province and territory.

This workbook is especially designed for small businesses in Ontario and is intended to help such businesses develop a suitable pay equity plan. The workbook first presents an overview of pay equity, including relevant information on Ontario legislation, and the preliminaries to getting started on implementing a pay equity plan. It then sets out step-by-step instructions on plan preparation, including determination of male and female job classes; the gender neutral job comparison process; comparing and adjusting compensation; and posting and maintaining the pay equity plan. A sample plan is included. The appendix contains proposed amendments to the Ontario Pay Equity Act, a glossary, and a list of Pay Equity Commission publications. JU LA ON PR SS

This workbook provides information on the steps needed to set up a pay equity plan for an Ontario small business. It presents an example of a job evaluation system that can be used by a small employer, the job-to-job comparison method. The method examines certain subfactors relating to skill, effort, responsibility, and working conditions and then rates male and female job classes. Female job classes needing adjustments are identified for subsequent pay equity adjustments. Sample subfactors, a pay equity questionnaire, and procedures for assigning weights and point values to each factor, and for assigning values to job classes, are also presented. LA ON PR SS

Material in this manual is intended to assist Ontario employers (and, where appropriate, bargaining agents) to achieve pay equity using the proportional value method. It builds on material presented in the first two volumes and assumes that the user has already evaluated all job classes. It provides a method for doing proportional value for female job classes that did not have male comparators under the job-to-job comparison method, and shows how to achieve pay equity for these job classes by indirectly comparing them to male job classes in the organisation. This report synthesizes the available information on fish distribution, movements, critical habitat, and food web for the lower Slave River in the Northwest Territories. The first section discusses background information, the original questions posed by the Northern River Basins Study, and three general models of the function of large rivers. The second section describes the lower Slave River environment, including information on geography, habitat, climate, and fauna. The third section considers the distribution and abundance of fishes in time and space to provide a context for the interpretation of the findings of contaminants studies. The fourth section synthesizes information on fish movement in and out of the lower Slave River as revealed in telemetry and tagging studies. Demographic characteristics of nine northern fish species are examined in section five. Section six summarises available information on diets of major fish species in the Slave River and Delta in order to construct a piscine food chain. The report ends with a summary of major findings and knowledge gaps uncovered by the synthesis.

Les stratégies de sortie sont exposées et discutées au chapitre 3. Dans le quatrième chapitre, après une description détaillée de deux scénarios d'automatisation du pont, nous exposons le modèle mathématique utilisé afin d'évaluer les deux mesures de performance considérées dans ce mémoire. Le plan d'expérimentation ainsi que de nombreux résultats comparatifs sont présentés dans le chapitre 5. Des conclusions, recommandations et travaux futurs suivent. Des détails sur le logiciel de simulation utilisé pour obtenir des résultats partiels sont donnés dans l'annexe.

Describes the work and presents the findings of a task force that travelled across Canada to listen to young Canadians, talk about youth employment, and make recommendations that would help shape a National Youth Strategy. Begins with an overview of the federal context for examining youth employment and the reality of youth employment in Canada. Findings and recommendations are grouped under ten key themes: the need for partnerships to solve the challenge of youth unemployment; the need for relevant and timely access to information on the job market and employment programs; public awareness about youth employment issues; private sector employers; youth entrepreneurship; opportunities in the global marketplace; the role of technology in the workplace; federal youth initiatives; student loans; and youth at risk. Concludes with a ten-point action plan.

Describes an underground experiment conducted at the Underground Research Laboratory in Manitoba to investigate the response induced in the granitic rock mass by excavating a 3.5-metre-diameter tunnel using a non-explosive technique involving line-drilling and hydraulic rock-splitting. The main objective of the experiment was to study the processes involved in progressive failure and the development of excavation-induced damage around underground openings. To this end, state-of-the-art geomechanical and geophysical instrumentation was used to monitor excavation of the 46-metre-long test tunnel. The results presented include rock mass behaviour and failure mechanisms as observed in the field experiment and in laboratory tests; in-situ stresses and material properties established through back analyses; characteristics of the damaged zone; and findings from numerical modelling of progressive failure of the rock mass.

The objective of this report is to provide an overview of the theory and practice of crime prevention through environmental design (CPTED), with a view to outlining policy and program options for Canada Mortgage & Housing. It includes a review of CPTED literature, beginning with a summary of the theories which posit a relationship between the physical environment and crime, and including an overview of CPTED theory and a synopsis of the many principles and components of CPTED. This is followed by an analysis of the CPTED literature, with an emphasis on identifying and examining both the criticisms of and the gaps in the theoretical and empirical literature. The report concludes by identifying some of the lessons learned from the CPTED literature, and by recommending policy and program options.

Tourism British Columbia and the Council of Tourist Associations of BC have embarked on a project to conduct a product assessment which will be utilised in conjunction with market analysis to determine reasonable and appropriate growth rates for the provincial tourist industry. The product assessment documented in this product overview provides a detailed summary of the province's tourism products. The assessment methodology included a literature review, industry/government interviews, and a consultation process including workshops, supply-side analyses, and working group sessions. Information is provided on product capacity, visitor use, and market and revenue performance. Factors constraining growth are identified along with possible actions to address those constraints. A vision for tourism in the province is also presented, along with an evaluation of that vision. Includes glossary.

Describes laboratory respirometry trials using adult sockeye salmon implanted with electromyogram (EMG) transmitters to investigate the relationship between oxygen consumption and EMG pulse interval. Results suggested that EMG telemetry could be used to assess activity and thus relative energy expenditure in freely migrating salmon. The report then reviews field trials using EMG telemetry to assess the relative energetic costs of upstream migration by adult sockeye through specific reaches of the Fraser River. The results indicate whether EMG telemetry can identify features and reaches of the river that impede upstream migration and provide insight into the behavioural responses of fish to areas of difficult passage.

Describes the utilisation of health services for mental health disorder in Manitoba in the period immediately prior to the introduction of significant changes in the structure and organisation of the mental health care sector. A comprehensive profile of the treatment prevalence of mental health disorder and the utilisation of mental health services in the province is presented by combining information from physician claims, hospital discharge abstracts, and provincial mental health institutions from April 1, 1991 through March 31, 1992. The diagnostic profile and persistence of health service utilisation among intensive users of mental health services is described for a four-year period (1988-92). Finally, a number of opportunities are noted for monitoring the impact of the reduction in psychiatric bed supply in Winnipeg using computerised administrative records.

L'objectif général de ce projet était de développer un ensemble d'outils intégrés permettant aux divers intervenants des forêts privées d'analyser les options de mise en valeur d'un territoire et d'en mesurer la faisabilité biophysique et économique. Plus spécifiquement, il s'agissait de développer, en privilégiant la géomatique, une architecture de bases de données qui permettrait de faire une analyse du territoire et des options de mise en valeur en conformité avec les objectifs des producteurs et l'état d'avancement d'un projet. Enfin, le logiciel Défi devait être validé en le confrontant à la réalité des producteurs.

The Vancouver Island Highway Project (VIHP) involves construction or upgrading of about 220 kilometres of highway between Victoria and Campbell River. The project is in four sections, each involving different conditions and types of construction. The project has opened up a wide range of opportunities for contractors, suppliers, and individuals. This report provides an overview of the VIHP, the way contracts are awarded, and how people are trained and employed on the project. It explains contracting procedures, the types of contracts that are being awarded, the training programs that have been provided, the types of jobs that have been created, and how to go about applying for work on the project. Information is presented under the headings of project overview, contracting, employment, and other business opportunities. Each section closes with suggestions on where to get started and who to contact for additional information.

Les changements proposés dans le document L'école primaire ne sont pas neutres. Ils s'inspirent de valeurs et de principes qui ont déjà été annoncés et décrits. Cette monographie vise à décrire le nouveau quotidien de l'école primaire. Nous tentons de répondre à la question suivante: Dans quelques années, que devrions-nous observer dans les classes pour affirmer que le renouvellement du primaire est une réussite? Toute cette monographie s'inspire des principes pédagogiques déjà énoncés dans L'école primaire. Ces principes que l'on se contente d'énumérer sont intégrés dans les différentes parties de cette monographie.

Presents findings from interviews conducted with key federal officials as part of the Federal Review of Victimization Surveys. The first section identifies the federal information requirements that can be addressed by victimisation surveys, focusing on victimisation levels and trends, the social distribution of victimisation experiences, the aetiology of victimisation, and the impact and threat of victimisation. The second section considers the strengths and weaknesses of past federally-sponsored victimisation surveys in the context of these information requirements and on the basis of several methodological issues. The final section outlines options for future surveys in terms of costs, benefits, and the potential advantages and drawbacks of distinct methodological approaches.

The St. Croix Estuary Project is a non-governmental organisation founded primarily to develop a plan for community-based management of the estuary area, mainly the waters and resources of the international (Maine/New Brunswick) estuary and some adjacent Canadian coastal waters. One of the uses of the estuary area is sewage discharge, which can be reduced by reducing water use in communities. Accordingly, the Project undertook an audit of water use in the town of St. Stephen to obtain information that would indicate the potential for water demand reduction or water conservation. This report presents findings of that audit. It begins by describing the audit methodology, including surveys of residential and industrial water consumption. Results presented include water supply and use trends by end-use sector, identification of water efficiency opportunities, and an alternative water pricing structure.

Toronto : Ministry of Environment & Energy, 1996. 64 p. : Bibl. ISBN 0-7778-5201-2 MICROLOG 96-06746 (1 fiche)

The Municipal-Industrial Strategy for Abatement (MISA) program in Ontario is intended to achieve virtual elimination of toxic contaminants in municipal and industrial discharges into waterways. As a first step in this program, regulations were promulgated that required intensive 12-month monitoring of industrial wastewater discharges at 237 plants in nine industrial sectors, 1988-91. Joint government-industry committees prepared estimates of the capital and operating costs of monitoring activities at each plant, and prior to completion of year-long monitoring programs, plants were sent questionnaires to obtain data on actual expenditures incurred for monitoring. This report describes the monitoring activities required by the regulations and summarises key results of monitoring efforts. Cost estimates are compared with actual reported expenses using statistical tests, in order to assess the accuracy of estimated costs.

As part of a survey of residents of northern Alberta river basins, respondents were asked to choose the best and worst examples of various sets of threats to water quality/quantity in the basins as well as best and worst examples of possible management actions. This report analyses the responses to the two sets of best/worst questions, using logistic regression. The analysis produced the following estimates: the probability that each of 11 possible threats to water quality/quantity will be selected as the area of most concern; and the probability of each of 11 possible management actions will be selected as the most effective response to such concerns. The probabilities produced by this analysis are ranked to determine the preferences of northern households and various stakeholder groups within the basin.

What will it mean to be an Albertan in the 21st Century? A discussion paper

Alberta. Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. Edmonton : The Council, 1996. 51 p. MICROLOG 96-06865 (1 fiche)

This publication contains two discussion papers to generate public debate on the future of Alberta and the role of Albertans with disabilities in that future. The first responds to requests for further interpretation of the governmental restructuring under the 'Klein Revolution' and a delineation of a vision for the province. It begins with an interpretation of the Revolution in an attempt to build some shared understanding of its impact beyond deficit elimination. It then discusses the origins of Alberta's core values and traditional definitions of responsibility, and relates these values to the traditional definitions of community in Alberta. Such definitions are vital for persons with disabilities and other disadvantaged Albertans. It then lays out an approach to renewal of community and concludes with a vision of Alberta in the 21st century. The second paper reviews challenges facing Alberta communities and the difficulties associated with assuring the inclusion in community for persons with disabilities. It concludes with a discussion of the specific threats facing those persons.

This report completes the second phase of a study of the Family Violence Court (FVC) in Winnipeg, which began operations in September 1990 and deals exclusively with cases of spousal assault, child abuse, and elder abuse. The report first addresses whether the FVC could sustain the momentum of its first year of operation in the face of rapidly increasing volume. It reviews FVC activities in the second year, highlighting areas of difference with the first year, and combines both years' data to give an overall two-year picture of FVC performance. The report then examines the relationship between the FVC and other Manitoba courts that handle criminal matters, giving rise to three areas of inquiry: the extent to which court processes and outcomes differ for family violence cases; the extent to which such cases are proceeding to the Court of Queen's Bench, and the differences in outcomes, acquittal rates, and sentencing procedures of the two courts; and the relationship between the FVC and the Appeal Court.

The inventory is limited to publications developed since 1988 and programs currently in operation. The first section includes an overview of the history of law-related education and some of the literature that has influenced its development in Canada. The second section describes programs given by each province and territory for three categories of young people determined by the kind of legal information that seems most appropriate to their needs: youth in school, youth at risk, and youth in custody. Information provided includes name, position, and telephone number of contact person and a brief description of the program or services offered. The third section is an inventory of materials published by each ministry or agency that informs or instructs young people directly, or which are designed for educators and service providers who work with youth. This inventory includes print and visual material, and provides bibliographic information and description of content. The final section is a comparative evaluation of the most effective programs in place, organised according to the areas and categories of the first two sections. This section also contains suggestions on what might be done to improve production and dissemination of law-related information to young people.
